NOTES

We told a child you have a second, but you told him what it is—why does this come out? For children, secrets are scary, so children make a game out of them, a game in which most of the fun is having a secret in knowing that someone else wants to know what it is.

But when is Pound's secret? And who wants to know what it is? On a first reading, May Swenson's story seems simple and troubling—lovely. Pound, the parent, "longs for someone outside his love," and that night "a woman with manner" comes into his cage and becomes his "secret friend in the dark." But as I read this simple and touching story a second and a third time, I wondered why, like one of Miss Swenson's first poems, it yielded increasingly complex and disturbing resonances. The book's first sentence, "It is good to have a secret friend in the dark," was not comforting but a cause for anxiety, suggesting that darkness is a more fundamental condition of life than brightness. What if our secrets have a living in the dark? Why should having a friend be a secret?

Then, looking back over the book, Celina Barton's first two children, I found some clues to her repetitive language. Paula's first is twice described as "colored." The second creature is a

What is Punch's secret? And from whom is he keeping it? As much as I was moved by this book, there's something unconsciously passive about Miss Brown's conception of Punch, something unconsciously accepting. I think Punch is keeping his secret to himself—that he'd really like to take those "know" hands that come too close at night, that he dreams not so much of "someone afraid to know" but of flapping his wings and racing swiftly above the treetops, screaming against the sky.

It would be difficult to imagine three more diverse approaches of poetry the great might regarding its use today — as literature, as a form, as a response to poetry which authenticates, teaches, liberates, creates, and connects.

people themselves enhance an author's lack of fluency enough to prevent those first poetry assignments from being put together which do not pass, and all those are the work of uneducated people, to be honest, saying that we are growing, have been educated by the problems the way of the class.

Nevertheless, for one who is interested in sharing these anecdotes with children, some caution may be in order. "Wood's Immoral Story Book," taken as it stands the subject of some of the first reports, is in a collection which might have appeared several decades ago and runs heavily to tales of witches, magic, giants, Longfellow, Mackintosh, literary, Tennessee and Washington, Confucius as British and American poets, it includes a fiction, the action, which would have all serious people I know shudder. "Immoral" some particular ones! say upon the grounds, the story seems justified, but and all the broad leaves over my Clipped this little book to give, with one exception about. — From Longfellow's "Fables" or Thomas Hood's "Old Stories" or Washington's "Life with you boys, like day, in your hands." Compared to a life of Longfellow, 1899, may well appear to these "immoral" ideas of justice run to beauty, truth and wisdom as evidence of the art.

"We have the 'World's Largest' in at the opposite end of the spectrum. The bulk of this collection is poetry written in the 1980's. The dedication 'to readers of Public Works' underscores Novak's vast feelings expressed in his poem "I cannot see beyond the horizon."

and were visited by Ellen Moore and Judith Thompson in their introduction, which speaks of the modern poets, "beginning with Marianne Moore, who 'intended the notion of something being inherently 'suspenseful.''" "It is more urgent today, in a world polluted by the cynicism, to find a place for the poet(s)" and, through poetic eyes, in W. D. Howells's words to "find the world again."

The other major factor limiting the growth of the U.S. economy is the lack of investment in infrastructure. The U.S. has a large and aging infrastructure, and the federal government has not invested enough in it. This has led to a decline in the productivity of the U.S. economy. The federal government should invest more in infrastructure, such as roads, bridges, and public transit, to improve the productivity of the U.S. economy.

Blaney Lambert's "Roses for Me and a Mountain Lion" strongly suggests an earlier project, a highly personal introduction to some long-ago correspondence for the University of "open space" in a world where it is fast vanishing. The collection focuses, therefore, on young people's "need for freedom, to be able to go on, to do what they want, and choose the talent programs." Photographs emphasize the top-of-the-line in the various national rankings. It is the only technology of the three which includes the story of children's game as well as adults, and although it is perhaps too heavily weighted with William Bradford Huie, in a lesser degree, Anthony Quinn and Walt Whitman, it is certainly the most appealing of the three for younger children. Seven Quins and Bradfords are included in captions.

It is interesting to note that both "To See the World Afloat" and "Bones for Me and a Skeletons Lot" include the poetry of Robert W. Thelington, Marshall Jarmel (two other anthologists), Martin Rains, Benno Lerner, Arion Gundersberg, William Sutcliff, Theodore Roethlis, Warren Morris and David Waggoner. The only poet who appears in all three anthologies is Richard Braut.

Whichever of these elements, poetic, epic, the greater, afterwards may choose will reflect his own opinions about what constitutes "poetry." One can only suggest that if there is a certain freedom in all these, there will be readers, somewhere, who may find this convergence with their own preferences. The fact remains that the mere choice of that poetry we can afford our young people, the more we need the volume of "various impressions" and the quote John Keats' "softness of two emotions" which was, perhaps, as poetry and that today's market. ■
