Flowering Plants · Dicotyledons Klaus Kubitzki, Jens G. Rohwer, Volker Bittrich, 2013-06-29 This volume the first of this series dealing with angiosperms comprises the treatments of 73 families representing three major blocks of the dicotyledons magnoliids centrosperms and hamamelids These blocks are generally recognized as subclasses in modern textbooks and works of reference We consider them a convenient means for structuring the hundreds of dicotyledon families but are far from taking them at face value for biological let alone monophyletic entities Angiosperm taxa above the rank of family are little consolidated as is easily seen when comparing various modern classifications Genera and families in contrast are comparatively stable units and they are important in practical terms The genus is the taxon most frequently recognized as a distinct entity even by the layman and generic names provide the key to all information available about plants The family is as a rule homogeneous enough to conveniently summarize biological information yet comprehensive enough to avoid excessive redundancy. The emphasis in this series is therefore primarily on families and genera. Report of a Working Group on Medicinal and Aromatic Plants E. Lipman, 2009. Plant Conservation and Biodiversity David L. Hawksworth, Alan T. Bull, 2007-09-18. Non-timber forest products (NTFP) hold economic and cultural significance for millions of people across the globe. For instance, hundreds of millions of rural peoples currently derive a significant portion of both their subsistence needs and cash income from gathered plant and animal products. Iqbal 1993, Vedeld et al 2004. Thousands of wild NTFP are also harvested for local use in other cultural and religious activities such as rituals, ceremonies, and dances, e.g., FAO 1991. A growing body of literature has illustrated that NTFP harvest can have ecological consequences at multiple ecological scales and that demographic responses to harvest are heavily influenced by harvesting practices (see review by Ticktin 2004). However, although many NTFP are harvested from disturbed habitats and subject to multiple pressures (Cunningham 2001), few quantitative studies have addressed this issue. For example, a small number of studies have assessed the demographic effects of NTFP management practices in the context of browsing or grazing (Endress et al 2004b, Ghimire et al 2005) or human-induced (Ticktin 2005). Nonetheless, the demographic consequences of NTFP harvest and management in the context of other disturbance factors such as alien invasive species have not been addressed to date. Alpine Biodiversity in Europe Laszlo Nagy, Georg Grabherr, Christian Körner, Desmond B.A. Thompson, 2012-12-06. The United Nations Conference on the Environment and Development (UNCED) held in Rio de Janeiro in 1992 spawned a multitude of programmes aimed at assessing, managing, and conserving the earth's biological diversity. One important issue addressed at the conference was the mountain environment. A specific feature of high mountains is the so-called alpine zone, i.e., the treeless regions at the uppermost reaches. Though covering only a very small proportion of the land surface, the alpine zone contains a relatively large number of plants, animals, fungi, and microbes which are specifically adapted to cold environments. This zone contributes fundamentally to the planet's biodiversity and provides many resources for mountain dwelling as well as lowland people. However, rapid and largely man-made changes are affecting mountain ecosystems such as soil erosion, losses of habitat and genetic diversity, and climate change, all of which have to be addressed. As stated in the European Community Biodiversity Strategy, the global scale of biodiversity reduction or losses and the interdependence of different species and ecosystems across national borders demands concerted international action. Managing biodiversity in a rational and sustainable way needs basic knowledge on its qualitative and quantitative aspects at local, regional, and global scales. This is particularly true for mountains which are distributed throughout the world and are indeed hot spots of biodiversity in absolute terms as well as relative to the surrounding lowlands. Understanding plant diversity and evolution in the Mediterranean basin Nico Cellinese, Božo Frajman, Andrew A. Crowl, Gonzalo Nieto Feliner, 2023-04-28.
