Pueblo Shields From The Fred Harvey Fine Arts Collection:

Pueblo Shields from the Fred Harvey Fine Arts Collection Barton Wright, 1976 Prehistorically small hand held shields are portrayed in Anasazi and Fremont rock paintings and petroglyphs from presumably around the thirteenth century ideal for use with clubs in hand to hand combat These are contemporaneous with numerous depictions of pedestrian shield bearers with large body shields Historically the Apache Comanche and Ute shared design elements Apache painting on rawhide is well known for its use of serrations Western Plateau and Kutenai painted teeth as borders in parfleche motifs Designs on prehistoric shields and on historic shields are both variable and repeated the latter since the round field of the shield often dictates a predilection for certain solutions to decoration Very few shield designs are exclusive to any one cultural or tribal group A design commonly used on historic Rio Grande Pueblo shields A characteristic pattern consisting of a wide band often decorated with three or so circles that cuts the shield face in two horizontally Above are buffalo horns and below a fan shaped element suggestive of eagle tail feathers The fact that shields were often obtained as by the Navajo from other tribes is a major factor accounting for a broad distribution of designs and other features of manufacture during the historic period In addition during the early historic and even Protohistoric period designs were often widely shared between different tribal groups This was especially the case once the horse was introduced and communication became fluid over vast territories

Ferguson, Chip Colwell, 2015-09-01 Arizona's San Pedro Valley is a natural corridor through which generations of native peoples have traveled for more than 12 000 years and today many tribes consider it to be part of their ancestral homeland This book explores the multiple cultural meanings historical interpretations and cosmological values of this extraordinary region by combining archaeological and historical sources with the ethnographic perspectives of four contemporary tribes Tohono O'odham Hopi Zuni and San Carlos Apache Previous research in the San Pedro Valley has focused on scientific archaeology and documentary history with a conspicuous absence of indigenous voices yet Native Americans maintain oral traditions that provide an anthropological context for interpreting the history and archaeology of the valley The San Pedro Ethnohistory Project was designed to redress this situation by visiting archaeological sites studying museum collections and interviewing tribal members to collect traditional histories The information it gathered is arrayed in this book along with archaeological and documentary data to interpret the histories of Native American occupation of the San Pedro Valley This work provides an example of the kind of interdisciplinary and politically conscious work made possible when Native Americans and archaeologists collaborate to study the past As a methodological case study it clearly articulates how scholars can work with Native American stakeholders to move beyond confrontations over who owns the past yielding a more nuanced multilayered and relevant archaeology Tribal and Ethnic Art Clio Press Ltd, 1982 American Indian Art , 1975 Library of Congress Catalogs Library of Congress, 1977
