Beat Streuli Beat Streuli, Rupert Pfab, Boris Grois, 1999 Swiss photographer Beat Streuli has come to international attention in the photo and art communities for his images of the tempos of modern urban living pictures of haste movement and time passing or even dragging on Using a telephoto lens he photographs unknown passers by mainly anonymous young people capturing their relationship to public space Writing in Parkett 54 Trevor Smith comments that his work makes palpable the psychological dimension of all urban situations It explores the patterns of attention and inattention that people deploy to live in the city to be in the crowd The people in Streuli's images visibly negotiate their connection to their environment the boundaries of their awareness are constantly shifting expanding and contracting to dodge the city's shadows
