Mildred at Roselands: a Sequel to Mildred Keith Martha Finley, 2016-01-08

Mildred at Roselands; A Sequel to Mildred Keith.* by Martha Finley, 182, 2016-10-15 Before Martha Finley had completed the first six titles of The Elsie Books in 1876, she began a new series based upon the Dinsmore's Midwestern relatives, the Keiths. The resulting seven-book series, The Mildred Series, introduces Mildred Keith, their sixteen-year-old daughter. Her father, a lawyer by trade, had moved with his wife and eight children from Ohio to the frontier of Indiana in the 1830s, not unlike Martha Finley's identical journey as a girl with her family. At the end of the first book, Mildred becomes very ill with a fever and is slow to recover. Arthur Dinsmore Sr., Elsie's grandfather, travels from Roselands, his home in the East, to visit the Keiths. While there, he suggests that the southern climate at Roselands may be beneficial to Mildred's health. This is followed by the death of Elsie's guardian in Louisiana. Mildred travels with Arthur Dinsmore to visit Elsie at Viamede. In this way, The Mildred Books fill the reader in on some of the events of Elsie's early childhood before the Elsie series opens. Martha Finley has woven the characters of the two series in and out of her stories to fill in some of the sequential gaps in the plot lines of her early Elsie stories and to provide some further depth to her characters and their relationships with one another. In this way she enriches the Elsie stories that have thrilled girls for more than 130 years. Slow to recover from her bout with ague, Mildred joins her uncle Arthur Dinsmore Sr on a trip by rail and steamer to the Dinsmore home, Roselands, to take advantage of the southern climate. Mildred befriends the governess at Roselands and is befriended by sweet Violet Travilla, mistress of Ion and mother to Edward Travilla. When Elsie's guardian dies, the motherless Elsie is brought to Roselands while her father is still in Europe. Meanwhile, Mildred struggles to remain firm in her faith and endures the heartbreak of loving Charlie Landreth, someone she cannot marry.

Excerpt: There's not a joy the world can give like that it takes away. Byron. Dear me, another dull, rainy, tedious day! sighed Mrs Dinsmore the next morning as she turned from the breakfast table, walked to the window and looked out upon the gardens and fields where everything was dripping with wet. Will the storm never end? No hope of visitors to-day or of setting out to see anybody. I shall be literally eaten up with ennui. Here's Mildred remarked Mr Dinsmore. I have always found her good company. Humph, she has no time to waste upon me. I am quite at your service. Aunt said our heroine pleasantly. Indeed, what's to become of your all important studies? They have already had two hours devoted to them this morning besides two last night, so I think I have fairly earned the pleasure of your society for so much of the day as you care to have mine returned. The girl in a sprightly tone Mrs Dinsmore looked languidly surprised and pleased. You are an odd girl to rise so early when you might just as well indulge in a morning nap, she said. I don't find it difficult if I have gotten to bed in good season the night before, said Mildred gayly. I have been trained to it from childhood, my father being a firm believer in the old adage, Early to bed and early to rise makes a man healthy, wealthy and wise, and it is really very pleasant after one is fairly up and dressed. Yes, and I dare say we would all be the better for it if we would follow your example, said Mr Dinsmore. You are altogether mistaken as far as I am concerned, remarked his wife pettishly. My best sleep is in the morning. I suppose people differ about that as well as in the amount of sleep they require, observed Mildred, some needing eight.

Mildred at Roselands Martha Finley, 2016-09-10. Excerpt from Mildred at Roselands, A Sequel to Mildred Keith. It was near noon of a bright, warm day early in October. Mrs Keith was alone in her pretty sitting room busily plying her needle at the open window looking out upon the river. Occasionally she lifted her head and sent a quick admiring glance at its bright, swiftly flowing waters and the woods beyond beautiful and gorgeous in their rich autumnal robes.
