PROFILE

Harrier II receives an update

As recently as previous month, despite being the closest thing to a Harrier II, the Harrier II Plus was not yet in service. However, the latest news from McDonnell Douglas (MD) suggests that the Harrier II Plus will be operational by the end of 1998. The Harrier II Plus retains the classic signature configuration of the previous Harrier II, with the addition of a more advanced cockpit.

In June 1997, McDonnell Douglas and BAE announced plans to develop the Harrier II Plus as a joint programme. The two aircraft, which had been developed independently, were to be merged into a single programme under the name of Harrier II Plus. The Harrier II Plus retains the classic Harrier II configuration, with the addition of a more advanced cockpit.

■ Outwardly identical to the Harrier II, the Harrier II Plus has been optimised for compatibility with the Harrier II Plus, including a new modular weapons system and a strengthened engine.

■ Compared to the original Harrier design, the Harrier II Plus has been optimised for compatibility with the Harrier II Plus, including a new modular weapons system and a strengthened engine.

McDonnell Douglas has now taken over responsibility for the Harrier II Plus programme, which is now known as the Harrier II Plus. The Harrier II Plus is a development of the Harrier II, with the addition of a new modular weapons system and a strengthened engine.

The Harrier II Plus is currently in development, with the first flight scheduled for late 1998.
