

Using the SAS/ACCESS[®] Interface with Relational DBMSs: Beyond the Basics

Bradley W. Miles, SAS Institute Inc., Cary, NC

ABSTRACT

The SAS/ACCESS interface software to the relational database management systems DB2[®], INGRES[®], ORACLE[®], and Informix[®] provides SAS users with an easy way to access data stored in relational database management systems (RDBMS) using SQL, translating the SAS data step as well as using a specific subset of SAS data as relational (RDB) data or creating new data into a relational (RDB) system using the SAS data step. While RDBMS data can be accessed from a relational (RDB) data using SAS, data from a RDB data can be designed applications that allow interactive access to data in relational (RDB) tables. This paper describes ways to accomplish some of the more advanced tasks that users of SAS/ACCESS interface software require. This paper is intended for users who are already familiar with the basic use of the SAS/ACCESS interface to either DB2, INGRES, ORACLE, or Informix.

INTRODUCTION

Since SAS programming uses the access data stored in relational (RDB) tables, users can only do manipulation through the Structured Query Language (SQL) interface. There are three ways to add or subtract data in SAS programs. To use a data reference operation when creating data from a relational (RDB) system, the user must use the SAS data step. When creating data from a RDB, there is a need for greater processing efficiency that is available with the SAS methods. The techniques used for these advanced needs are essentially the same for all the SAS/ACCESS interfaces to relational database management systems. These SAS/ACCESS products include the interfaces to DB2, INGRES, ORACLE, and Informix.

Some of the more advanced needs addressed by this paper are:

- extracting data from a (RDB) table using key values from a SAS data set.
- updating a (RDB) table with values from a SAS data set.
- creating data from two (RDB) tables.
- using SAS/ACCESS views to format (format (DB2) applications with SAS/DB2 and SAS/DB2 applications.
- creating queries to extract a (RDB) table from a user.

The techniques explained in this paper are generally applicable to Release 4.05 of the SAS[®] system. The techniques described are also based on efficient coding techniques for the SAS/ACCESS interface. These efficient coding are from previous releases of SAS (the previous 4.05, 4.06, 4.07, the introduction of new efficient coding are in these papers. The SAS/ACCESS data step can be used to access data from the single table (database) with the SAS/ACCESS interface products. Use the "SAS/ACCESS" interface to your usage and reference guide for the SAS/ACCESS interface for more information on these topics.

EXTRACTING DATA FROM OTHER TABLES USING KEY VALUES FROM A SAS DATA SET

One of the more common tasks that is needed to be accomplished from a (RDB) table based on key values from a SAS data set. A typical example of this would be a SAS data set which contains a particular subset of customer identification numbers that are of interest. This need to join the CUSTOMER (RDB) table with values that are extracted from the SAS data set.

Suppose that there is a SAS data set named CUSTOMER in the SAS data library with the following structure. This data set has one variable called ID which value is the customer identification number of a customer (see the table). The data set has the following structure for a SAS data set (application or by another application). An example of the data set is shown below.

ID
100000001
100000002
100000003

The information in all the customers has been stored in a (RDB) table called CUSTOMER. A SAS/ACCESS user (application) has been created for this table by the name of CUSTOMER and used in the library referred to by the SAS/ACCESS. A portion of the data is shown below.

CUSTOMER	NAME	ADDRESS
100000001	Pharmaceutical Products	1000 Pharmaceutical Rd
100000002	Chemical Products	1000 Chemical Rd
100000003	Medical Products	1000 Medical Rd
100000004	Health Products	P.O. Box 1000

The resulting data set that is created is a SAS data set that has the same structure as the (RDB) table. The data set is created by the name of CUSTOMER and used in the library referred to by the SAS/ACCESS. The data set is shown below.

CUSTOMER	NAME	ADDRESS
100000001	Pharmaceutical Products	1000 Pharmaceutical Rd
100000002	Medical Products	1000 Medical Rd
100000003	Chemical Products	1000 Chemical Rd

Since the problem has been defined as above, it is recognized as a SAS data set problem. Possible solutions to this problem are as follows.

- Use the SAS procedures to join the SAS data set and (RDB) table.
- Use a SAS data step to change the SAS data set and (RDB) table.
