Sex Differences In Labor Markets:

Sex Differences in Labor Markets David Neumark, 2004-01-29 David Neumark's work on gender and labor markets appears for the first time in one book here with new introductory material Sex Discrimination in the Labor Market Joni Hersch, 2007-01-02 Women have made huge advances relative to men in the labor force occupational status and educational attainment but women continue to earn less than men While the gender pay gap has narrowed a substantial gap remains Sex Discrimination in the Labor Market examines sources of this pay disparity and the factors that contribute to this gap Whether sex discrimination plays a role in the gender pay gap is a topic of considerable debate Many researchers question the role of discrimination and attribute the residual pay gap to gender differences in preferences especially with respect to balancing work with family responsibilities Sex Discrimination in the Labor Market shows that sex discrimination contributes to the unexplained gender pay gap which is consistent with high profile sex discrimination litigation suggesting continuing bias in the labor market on the basis of sex Sex Differences and Sex Discrimination in Labor Markets David Neumark, 2003 Sex differences in labor markets are pervasive In the United States three differences in particular have attracted the most attention from economists the earnings gap between women and men occupational segregation of women and men and the greater responsibility of women for child care and housework or home production and concomitant lower participation in market work This essay summarizes and synthesizes the research I have done over the past 15 years on understanding these differences and assessing policy responses to them and places this work in the context of the broader literature Considerable progress has been made in research on non discriminatory sources of sex differences in labor markets the role of discrimination and policy responses Yet there is still a considerable lack of consensus on all three of these issues I would argue that research emanating from the economics of the family has generated some very clever and compelling non discriminatory explanations for sex differences in labor markets in particular differences in wages and occupational choice Although there is some evidence consistent with these explanations this evidence does not rule out an important role for discrimination in generating sex differences in labor markets I also believe that the lack of consensus regarding the existence of discrimination is partly inertial By this I mean that the many empirical studies of discrimination using the wage regression approach which documented a large wage gap between women and men and often attributed a sizable proportion of this gap to discrimination are not viewed as very compelling At the same time the newer literature carrying out more convincing tests of discrimination and in my view establishing rather compelling evidence of discrimination is less well known Finally policy responses remain contentious not only because of disputes over whether they are appropriate in principle i e whether there is discrimination but also because the cure is sometimes viewed as worse than the disease As an example I would conjecture that among labor economists who are quite convinced women suffer from wage discrimination many would nonetheless not endorse comparable worth And the conflict over affirmative action shows signs only of sharpening Monopsonistic Labour Markets and the Gender Pay Gap Boris Hirsch,2010-04-05 This book investigates models of spatial and dynamic monopsony and their application to the persistent empirical regularity of the gender pay gap Gender Convergence in the Labor Market Solomon W.
