The Elderly Martin Lyon Levine, 2017-05-15 Aging is a public health priority that is becoming increasingly important in both developed and less developed nations with individual health care providers and law makers each facing difficult ethical and policy dilemmas. The complex issues physicians deal with include informed consent and patient decision making capacity, use of advance care planning and decision making by family and medical staff, and withdrawing and withholding life sustaining interventions. Broader questions include: has aging been over medicalized? Is it ethical for older patients to receive less medical care than younger ones through unspoken practice or formal rationing? Is there inevitable conflict between the generations over scarce medical resources? How should physician, patient, and family confront end of life decisions? How have different nations responded to increasing numbers of the elderly? Have social values changed as to family responsibility and individual autonomy? This volume brings together the most significant published essays in the field. The State of the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs Long-term Care Program Present and Future United States. Congress. House. Committee on Veterans' Affairs. Subcommittee on Health, 2008. Aging, Society, and the Life Course Leslie A. Morgan, Suzanne R. This fifth edition describes important changes in the field of social gerontology and the growth in such topics as diversity, global aging, and the life course. It addresses major shifts in public policy, social institutions, and aging related programming initiatives. There is a strong focus on the changing landscape of aging, particularly in regard to social engagement, employment, and lifelong learning, enhanced health and independence, and livable communities for people of all ages. Additionally, the book includes new information on the Affordable Care Act and end of life issues. The text is uniquely organized, featuring theoretical discussions in each chapter and topical essays between chapters. Critical thinking and review questions foster an in-depth understanding of the material. Written in an engaging style, the text is for graduate and upper level undergraduate students; it is also used effectively in introductory gerontology classes.
