

Geophysical Survey in the Archaeological Record:

The Archaeological Investigations Project

Bronwen Russell & Timothy Darvill

Figure 1. Number of planning applications notified in England from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, divided into the number of recorded planning-related geophysical survey work from 1996-2001.

With the advent of PPG14 (Planning Policy Guidance note 14) in 1999, archaeology in England has developed within a detailed outline (current version: <http://www.dpm.gov.uk/ppg14/>). This has seen the rise of geophysical techniques as a rapid evaluation tool in planning-related archaeology (Figure 1). This new important survey can greatly enhance the known archaeological value of a site and its surrounding environs, for the case of developments it can be an invaluable way of locating structures to target the archaeology. The variety of methods and availability (investment types) means that the most appropriate method can be chosen for a project and by combining a number of methods a very detailed picture of the site can often be built up. Personal and public research projects also utilize geophysical survey techniques providing an essential research tool with quickly accessible results that can be used to illustrate the need for further work, and develop future strategies (see Figure 2).

Figure 2. Proportion of planning-related to overall recorded geophysical survey work in England from 1996-2001.

The Archaeological Investigations Project, funded by English Heritage, seeks to record and provide a picture of all archaeological investigations undertaken in England, year by year. It provides details of archaeological interventions for each county and survey authority in England and is the only systematically researched up-to-date record of its kind in England. The project researchers visit all county councils, commercial units and organisations that undertake regional fieldwork, while other sources are contacted for ground surveys. In addition to this, AIP has recently published Archaeology after PPG14, an archaeological investigation in England 1996-2000 (2001). An analysis of the changing character and distribution of archaeological work in England since the introduction of PPG14.

The development and availability of affordable, non-invasive equipment and data processing packages means that more active local archaeological involvement can afford at least basic monitoring equipment. This provides a useful non-invasive research tool which enables us to employ the broader public knowledge of archaeological sites and potentially contribute immensely to the enhancement of the local SMITHS (Sites and Monuments Record Heritage Environment Record).

For these local government and commercial units that now offer geophysical survey as their specialty of archaeological work, the number of specialist geophysical companies have grown significantly and within a range of commercial and non-profit (Figure 6) to address the growing demand. From the local market it has become a very cost-effective way of obtaining ground level archaeological information. The growth in independent Archaeology have been developed in a few years from one unit in 1996 to over 20 units are currently in use by CEA surveys. The more affordable commercial and cost of use to the surveyor means that many public sector archaeological units pursue their own equipment.

This situation has an increasing number of geophysical surveys being undertaken by a greater number of organisations just as first-time in the past decade (Figure 7), and that a wealth of information is becoming available. AIP aims to record these events and map the trends which they analysis reveals.

AIP has always recorded geophysical surveys which form part of a broader evaluation consisting of a number of archaeological techniques, specialist geophysical surveys were recorded on the English Heritage Geophysical Survey Database. The CEA contains details of all AIP geophysical surveys dating back to 1972, as well as a large number of other surveys carried out by other organisations and individuals, either registered as a requirement of government, for surveys to be conducted on a scheduled ancient monument, newly created ACP of the Historic Monuments Act, or used in conjunction to be included in the database.

The proliferation of geophysical surveys during the 1990s (Figure 8) means, however, that a more comprehensive approach was needed for tracking down and recording the events, extent and distribution of geophysical surveys of all kinds. These data collections (2001) onwards for events undertaken in England now include all geophysical survey work. It is hoped that this sample that be used to support and enhance already existing data sets.

Initial analysis has produced some interesting results, such as the increasing dependence on geophysics in the primary survey techniques and the dramatic increase in the use of PPG14 in archaeological investigations. One of the most significant is that collection from county councils has been comprehensive and therefore most easily accessible in a national scale.

History of Gardens in the Medieval Age Michael Leslie,2015-04-02 The Middle Ages was a time of great upheaval the period between the seventh and fourteenth centuries saw great social political and economic change The radically distinct cultures of the Christian West Byzantium Persian influenced Islam and al Andalus resulted in different responses to the garden arts of antiquity and different attitudes to the natural world and its artful manipulation Yet these cultures interacted and communicated trading plants myths and texts By the fifteenth century the garden as a cultural phenomenon was immensely sophisticated and a vital element in the way society saw itself and its relation to nature A Cultural History of Gardens in the Medieval Age presents an overview of the period with essays on issues of design types of gardens planting use and reception issues of meaning verbal and visual representation of gardens and the relationship of gardens to the larger landscape The Forest, Park and Palace of Clarendon, C. 1200-c. 1650 Amanda Richardson,2005

Reconstructing an actual conceptual and documented Wiltshire landscape The main argument of this thesis is that the landscape and locality of Clarendon Forest and Park some 6 km east of Salisbury Wiltshire England were strongly influenced by the presence or later absence of Clarendon Palace which fell into decay in the late fifteenth century The first sure evidence of a royal residence at Clarendon dates from the reign of Henry I 1100 1135 although the site may well have Saxon connections A primary aim of this work is to restore the wider conceptual landscape by considering the forest alongside the relict landscape of the park and it is argued throughout that because medieval forests are archaeologically elusive the best way to achieve this is through an intensive documentary methodology Attention is drawn throughout to the capacity of documents to illustrate how estates were managed over time The argument representing an unprecedented systematic study of manuscript sources for Clarendon Park and Forest held at central and regional record offices is supported by references to printed primary sources It has resulted in the compilation of a main computer database listing over 800 relevant documents held at the Public Record Office alone from which those that might prove most useful were selected and transcribed The transcriptions arranged by subject form several substantial and searchable electronic databases facilitating cross checking and comparison The written sources themselves have informed the structure of the work and help to illustrate that this unique landscape and locality was indeed profoundly influenced by the existence of a royal park and palace at its centre Nevertheless what has emerged strongly in the course of the study are the myriad ways in which the forest in turn shaped the lifecycle of the palace
