Excerpt from The Philosophy of Rudolf Eucken. In the following pages an attempt is made to sketch some of the fundamental aspects of the teaching of one of the most remarkable men of our day. Nothing more than an outline can be given in the space at my disposal, but I believe it to be possible to present in a brief and clear manner the most important elements of Eucken's teaching without mutilation. The reader must look upon this little volume as a finger post pointing to some of the most weighty contributions which Eucken has made in the domains of Metaphysics and of Religion. The value of his teaching lies in the attempt which he has made to liberate the spirit of man from the bondage of Naturalism and Intellectualism in their various forms and to show that man's spirit possesses a self-subsistence of its own.
