

How to Respect the Religious Quasi-Other? Methodological Considerations in Studying the Kimbanguist Doctrine of Incarnation

Mika Vähäkangas

This chapter outlines a methodology for theologically analyzing and assessing predominantly oral non-Western theologies. First, the two major existing approaches are deliberated upon, namely, the (cultural/social) anthropology of Christianity and ecumenical (systematic) theology.<sup>1</sup> After exploring the pros and cons of both, a brief background of the Kimbanguist Church is presented, which serves as the case for reflecting upon methodological considerations. This is followed by an attempt to integrate the useful elements of both anthropology and theology. The whole exercise is conducted with the ecumenical theological agenda in mind, and therefore does not propose any value judgment on theological and anthropological or ethnographical approaches as such.

The Kimbanguist doctrine of incarnation is used as the concrete material for methodological deliberations because of its critical situation at the moment of writing – the Kimbanguist Church is very close to becoming the first church ever to have its membership in the World Council of Churches (WCC) discontinued on doctrinal grounds. Furthermore, it is a leading African Instituted Church with a rich oral theological tradition and deep involvement in the Kongo cultural heritage.

1. Ecumenics is the activity of promoting unity between Christian churches. Ecumenical theology is an academic discipline which studies ecumenics on the one hand and churches on the other, with the aim of providing analyses for the use of the stakeholders in ecumenics. Systematic theology is a discipline that deals with the doctrinal and philosophical aspects of theology. In this chapter, ecumenical theology is approached as a systematic theological discipline thereby ignoring, e.g., its historical dimension, which comes close to church history.

The Ideology of Religious Studies Timothy Fitzgerald, 2003-10-16 In recent years there has been an intensifying debate within the religious studies community about the validity of religion as an analytical category In this book Fitzgerald sides with those who argue that the concept of religion itself should be abandoned On the basis of his own research in India and Japan and through a detailed analysis of the use of religion in a wide range of scholarly texts the author maintains that the comparative study of religion is really a form of liberal ecumenical theology By pretending to be a science religion significantly distorts socio cultural analysis He suggests however that religious studies can be re represented in a way which opens up new and productive theoretical connections with anthropology and cultural and literary studies Identifying

Religious Voices in the Politics of International Development Paul J. Nelson, 2021-04-15 This first study of faith based development NGOs FBOs political roles focuses on how U S FBOs in international development educate and mobilize their constituencies Most pursue cautious reformist agendas but FBOs have sometimes played important roles in social movements Nelson unpacks those political roles by examining the prominence of advocacy in the organizations the issues they address and avoid their transnational relationships and their relationships with religious and secular social movements The agencies that educate and mobilize U S constituencies most actively are associated with small Christian sects or with non Christian minority faiths with historic commitments to activism or service Specialized advocacy NGOs play important roles and emerging movements on immigration and climate may represent fresh political energy The book examines faith based responses to the crises of climate change COVID 19 and racial injustice and argues that these will shape the future of religion as a moral and political force in America and of NGOs in international development Paul Tillich, Carl Jung and the Recovery of Religion John P. Dourley, 2008-06-30 Is religion a positive reality in your life If not have you lost anything by forfeiting this dimension of your humanity This book compares the theology of Tillich with the psychology of Jung arguing that they were both concerned with the recovery of a valid religious sense for contemporary culture Paul Tillich Carl Jung and the Recovery of Religion explores in detail the diminution of the human spirit through the loss of its contact with its native religious depths a problem on which both spent much of their working lives and energies Both Tillich and Jung work with a naturalism that grounds all religion on processes native to the human being Tillich does this in his efforts to recover that point at which divinity and humanity coincide and from which they differentiate Jung does this by identifying the archetypal unconscious as the source of all religions now working toward a religious sentiment of more universal sympathy This book identifies the dependence of both on German mysticism as a common ancestry and concludes with a reflection on how their joint perspective might affect religious education and the relation of religion to science and technology Throughout the book John Dourley looks back to the roots of both men s ideas about mediaeval theology and Christian mysticism making it ideal reading for analysts and academics in the fields of Jungian and religious studies The Psychology of Religion Ralph W.
