PHOTO-GUIDE TO THE CONSTELLATIONS

Finding your way round the night sky is not easy.

Star maps, computer software and photographs can all show what – potentially – is visible to the naked eye. But unless you are very experienced, locating stars and constellations can be very confusing, not least because many of the stars shown on the map are invisible. The reason is light pollution. In the urban parts of the world we are losing the night sky just as surely as we are losing the forests.

And that is why this Photo-guide to the Constellations shows no less than three photographs for each section of the sky – one taken from the suburbs of the city, one from a site that is a few miles from the nearest town, and one showing the splendour that is visible through unpolluted skies.
