Nahum Slouschz, 2013-02-28 The history of the development of modern Hebrew literature its character the extraordinary conditions fostering it its very existence are of a sort to surprise one who has not kept in touch with the internal struggles the intellectual currents that have agitated the Judaism of Eastern Europe in the course of the past century So far from deserving a reputation for casuistry modern Hebrew literature is if anything distinctly rationalistic in character It is anti dogmatic and anti Rabbinic Its avowed aim is to enlighten the Jewish masses that have remained faithful to religious tradition and to interpenetrate the Jewish communities with the conceptions of modern life Since the French Revolution the ghetto has produced valiant champions of every good cause politicians legislators poets who have taken part in all the movements of their day But it has also given birth to a legion of men of action sprung from the people and remaining with the people who in the name of liberty of conscience and in the name of science fought the same battles upon the field of traditional Judaism that the others were fighting outside A whole school of literary humanists undertook the work of emancipating the Jewish masses and pursued it for several generations with admirable zeal Hebrew became an excellent instrument of propaganda in their hands Thanks to their efforts the language of the prophets inarticulate for nearly two thousand years was developed to a striking degree of perfection It was shown to be a flexible medium varied enough to serve as the vehicle for any modern idea
