Science in the Marketplace Florence G. Korchin, 1984

The Economics of Science James R Wible, 2003-09-02

Science is difficult and costly to do well This study systematically creates an economics of science Many aspects of science are explored from an economic point of view The scientist is treated as an economically rational individual This book begins with economic models of misconduct in science and the legitimate normal practices of science moving on to market failure the market place of ideas self correctiveness and the organizational and institutional structures of science An exploration of broader methodological themes raised by an economics of science ends the work Science Fiction and Market Realities George Edgar Slusser, Gary Westfahl, Eric S. American Creationism, Creation Science, and Intelligent Design in the Evangelical Market Benjamin L. Huskinson, 2020-08-19 In this compelling and thoroughly researched book Benjamin Huskinson demonstrates that just as there is broad diversity within evangelicalism so too there is broad diversity among creationists His work on the Intelligent Design movement is superb and he prompts me to rethink my long held conviction that Intelligent Design is merely the most recent evolutionary form of creationism This is a very fine book Randall Balmer Author of Evangelicalism in America and writer host of In the Beginning The Creationist Controversy Benjamin Huskinson s study of American creationism will be an eye opener for those who sit on the opposite side of the evolution debate He shows that far from being a unified assault on Darwinism the campaign was actually a sequence of separate movements launched by rival evangelical groups competing for influence within their own community Peter Bowler Author of Monkey Trials and Gorilla Sermons Evolution and Christianity from Darwin to Intelligent Design A thoughtful and careful analysis that throws as much light on the diversity of American evangelicalism as it does on Christian attitudes to evolutionary theory Huskinson offers a smart analysis of religious anti evolution movements which neither demonises nor ridicules but seeks to understand the tenets and beliefs of a movement far more complex and multivalent than most of us appreciate A must read for science communicators Philippa Levine Walter Prescott Webb Chair in History and Ideas University of Texas at Austin USA This book explores the cultural history of anti evolution efforts in the United States from 1960 to the present refuting several popular narratives about creation science in evangelical America Separating theological terms like creationism from cultural movements such as creation science and intelligent design in an evangelical marketplace of ideas it contests assumptions that evangelical movements against evolution are homogeneous and it argues that intelligent design is not an off shoot of the creation science movement It demonstrates that the rationale of creationist groups is relational as well as ideological showing that the social function of American creationism which is to establish the boundaries of orthodox religion is key to understanding the competing strategies of creation science organisations

Impact of Science Education on the GCC Labor Market Alexander W. Wiseman, 2011-09-21 The large population of expatriates and other non nationals has outpaced the population of nationals in many Gulf Cooperation Council GCC countries Expatriates have come to Gulf countries to fill several niches in the labor market which has segmented the labor market around wages skills and employment sectors This labor market segmentation has been characterized by GCC nationals holding stable and high status jobs in the public sector which generally do not require specific education or skills However the labor market is becoming increasingly less segmented as expatriates and non nationals continue to fill private sector positions throughout the GCC labor market at all levels of pay and responsibility Evidence suggests that creating both a competitive and amenable labor market for GCC nationals in the private sector will require a labor strategy focusing on strengthening investment in human capital Doing this requires a significant investment in education either formally or informally From a policy perspective science education has been perceived to be one of the most important and rapid methods of building human capital for labor market readiness and productivity This monograph contextualizes the labor market relative to science education and vice versa in the GCC countries and summarizes the literature on the topic before turning to the 2007 Trends in International Mathematics and Science Study TIMSS data to examine comparatively science education and expectations for university and labor market transitions within and across GCC countries compared to international trends This data is also examined to determine the specific differences in GCC nationals and non nationals science knowledge and skills acquisition which contribute to labor market participation and productivity in GCC countries Finally the TIMSS 2007 data is analyzed to compare the differences between national and non national expectations and understanding of the labor market relative to their science knowledge and skills The findings reported here provide a data based portrait of the contribution of science education in GCC countries to labor market potential and participation of nationals and non nationals The results of these analyses provide a strong evidence base for policymakers in GCC countries to make decisions about science education and labor market policy Finally the monograph itself concludes with several evidence based policy recommendations for complementing existing strategies aimed at creating a more competitive environment for the transition of GCC nationals into the private sector labor market in GCC countries      The Science of Financial Market Trading Don K.
