ABSTRACT

Purpose: To identify patient factors associated with improper restraint usage and worse trauma outcomes for pediatric patients involved in motor vehicle collisions (MVCs).

Methods: Retrospective study performed at a Level I pediatric trauma center for patients ( $\leq 18$  yr) evaluated after MVC between 2008 and 2018. The Area Deprivation Index (ADI) was used to measure neighborhood socioeconomic disadvantage (NSD) levels based on the patient's home address. Trauma registry data was correlated to ADI and used to analyze appropriate restraint usage by NSD. Proper restraint practices were defined based on national guidelines and state laws. Demographics and clinical outcomes were also analyzed. Chi-square analysis with Bonferroni corrections was used to assess the association of ADI, race, and ethnicity with proper restraint usage.

Results: Among 1152 patients included, approximately 50% were male, the median age was 7 years [IQR 4–10], and 53% were of Hispanic ethnicity. Hispanic patients comprised 73% of children in ADI quintile 5 (greatest NSD), yet only 26% of children in ADI quintile 1 (least NSD). No differences were observed across clinical data and outcomes. Hispanic children  $< 8$  yr were significantly less likely to be in a car seat/booster seat compared to non-Hispanic children (OR 0.69, 95% CI 0.50–0.95,  $p = 0.025$ ). Furthermore, those with greatest NSD (ADI quintile 5) had the largest proportion of unrestrained patients (21%, see Fig. 1).

Conclusion: Hispanic children, especially those who require infant or booster seats ( $< 8$  yr), and children living in areas with greater neighborhood socioeconomic disadvantage demonstrated poorer restraint practices. ADI can successfully identify high-risk groups for targeted injury prevention programs and improved compliance in the most vulnerable neighborhoods.

Type of Study: Retrospective Study

1. Introduction

Several advances in car safety have led to a reduction in motor vehicle-associated mortality over the last two decades. Most notable among these advances was the widespread adoption of seat-belt usage, which contributed to an observed relative decrease in mortality of 38% between 2007 and 2016 [1]. While this decrease shows a promising trajectory when compared to previous decades, motor vehicle collisions (MVCs) are the leading cause of death among children and adolescents in the United States, accounting for roughly 20% of all pediatric deaths [1]. Rates of morbidity and mortality associated with pediatric MVCs continue to disproportionately affect patients with lower socioeconomic status (SES) and minority backgrounds [2]. There are several proposed mechanisms for these injury outcome disparities including poorer restraint usage, lower rates of car safety education, and barriers to timely and effective clinical care [2]. Recent studies in the pediatric population report restraint usage rates as low as 50% at the time of MVC, with the lowest rates seen among those of Hispanic ethnic or Native American racial backgrounds (36% and 37%, respectively) [2]. These findings present a pressing public health dilemma among the pediatric population that warrants further exploration and subsequent targeted interventions, such as car safety education for identified high-risk groups.

Previous studies have examined the relationship of individual metrics such as income level and race/ethnicity on clinical

An Experimental Study of Abnormal Children, with Special Reference to the Problems of Dependency and Delinquency Olga Louise Bridgman, 1918 National Academy Press ... Publications Catalog, 1985 Autism: The Movement Perspective Elizabeth B Torres, Anne M Donnellan, 2015-05-19 Autism Spectrum Disorders ASD is portrayed as cognitive and social disorders Undoubtedly impairments in communication and restricted repetitive behaviors that now define the disorders have a profound impact on social interactions But can we go beyond the descriptive observational nature of this definition and objectively measure that amalgamate of motions and sensations that we call behavior In this Research Topic we bring movement and its sensation to the forefront of autism research diagnosis and treatment We gather researchers across disciplines with the unifying goal of recognizing movement and sensory disturbances as core symptoms of the disorder We also hear confirmation from the perspective of autism self advocates and parents Those important sources of evidence along with the research presented in this topic demonstrate without a doubt that profound movement and sensory differences do exist in ASD and that they are quantifiable The work presented in this Research Topic shows us that quantifiable differences in movements have a better chance than current observational techniques to help us uncover subtle solutions that the nervous system with autism has already spontaneously self discovered and utilized in daily living Where the naked eye would miss the unique subtleties that help each individual cope instrumentation and fine kinematic analyses of motions help us uncover inherent capacities and predispositions of the person with autism The work presented in this topic helps us better articulate through the voices of parents and self advocates those sensory motor differences that current inventories could not possibly uncover These differences are seldom perceived as they take place at timescales and frequencies that fall largely beneath our conscious awareness To the person in the spectrum living with this disorder and to the caregiver creating accommodations to help the affected loved one these subtleties are very familiar though Indeed they are often used in clever ways to facilitate daily routines We have waited much too long in science to listen to the very people that we are trying to define understand and help Being autism a social problem by definition it is remarkable that not a single diagnosis inventory measures the dyadic social interaction that takes place between the examiner and the examinees Indeed we have conceived the autistic person within a social context where we are incapable by definition of accepting those differences The burden is rather placed on the affected person to whom much too often we refer to in the third person as non verbal without intentionality without empathy or emotions without a theory of mind among other purely psychological guesses It is then too easy and shockingly allowed to reshape that person to mold that person to better conform to our social expectations and to extinguish behaviors that are socially unacceptable even through the use of aversive punishing reinforcement techniques if need be And yet none of those techniques have had a single shred of objective scientific evidence of their effectiveness We have not objectively measured once nor have we physiologically characterized once any of those perceived features that we so often use to observationally define what we may think the autistic phenotype may be We have not properly quantified beyond paper and pencil methods the effectiveness of interventions in autism Let us not forget when we do our science that we are all part of the broad human spectrum
