National Security And Technology Transfer:

Technology Transfer United States. Congress. House. Committee on Science and Technology. Subcommittee on Science, Research, and Technology, 1985 National Security And Technology Transfer Gary K. Bertsch, 2019-02-22 The deterioration of detente in the wake of the ongoing Soviet arms build up has sharply focused the East West trade debate on the question of advanced technology transfer from the United States and its allies to the Soviet bloc The transfer and acquisition of high technology have become central ingredients in super power relations and are key elements of any national security policy President Reagan among others has questioned the wisdom of the policies of the 1960s and early 1970s when trade with the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe expanded rapidly At recent industrial nation summits conferees of Western countries agreed to high level review of their East West technology trade policies But in light of the apparent West European commitment to continue and expand trade with the East as exemplified by the Siberian gas pipeline project and the growing U S opposition to such technology transfer divisions between U S and Western trade policies toward the East are likely to become increasingly acute in the years ahead Professors Bertsch and McIntyre have selected comprehensive and representative articles to examine the question of technology transfer from a variety of perspectives political economic and military emphasizing both the U S and the Western allies points of view and offering insights into the complex issues raised by the strategic dimensions of East West trade Economic Espionage, Technology Transfers, and National Security United States. Congress. Joint Economic Committee, 1997 Technology Transfer Philip A. Roberts, 1988 National Security Takeovers and Technology Preservation United States. Congress. House. Committee on Energy and Commerce. Subcommittee on Commerce, Consumer Protection, and Competitiveness, 1991 Seller Beware Wayne M. Johnson, 1998 As was the case during the cold war the national military strategy of the United States relies on technologically superior forces to achieve our objectives when the armed forces are called on to protect the United States and its interests However as the military downsizes preserving a technologically superior force while also maintaining a robust defense industrial base becomes more difficult One means the United States uses to preserve the industrial base is to maintain demand by selling our military goods to other countries While foreign military sales FMS alone will not keep the US industrial base viable they have become more significant than in the days of larger US defense procurements In 1996 for example FMS exceeded 10 billion Indeed FMS can spell the difference between continued existence and bankruptcy for some of our defense contractors The perceived need to sell overseas while safeguarding US advanced technologies appears to be a conflicting goal because of the technology transfer involved In this important study Lt Col Wayne Johnson USAF argues that systematic tightening of interagency cooperation and better work on defining sensitive technology prohibitions are needed to maintain the US technological edge He also maintains that the US government requires a new and disciplined export control process not the current mosaic of rules regulations and perspectives that came out of the cold war but a process that provides a revamped

systemic approach with consistent implementation Colonel Johnson explores the problem of defining which technologies the United States is willing to transfer military or dual use and the need to ensure that national security objectives do not take a backseat to economic expediency To accomplish this end he argues for better interagency cooperation as a first step leading to a more centralized coordinated and strategic view of technology transfer and how it impacts US national security Recent events concerning missile technology transfers point out the timeliness of this debate These recommendations deserve to be read by a wide Department of Defense audience as the United States evaluates its policies to determine if short term interests in selling high technology arms to foreign countries can actually weaken rather than strengthen our national security

National Security Structure and Policy Formulation Eston T. White,Obadiah A. Dugan,1978 Knowledge Regulation and National Security in Postwar America Mario Daniels,John Krige,2022-04-25 The first historical study of export control regulations as a tool for the sharing and withholding of knowledge In this groundbreaking book Mario Daniels and John Krige set out to show the enormous political relevance that export control regulations have had for American debates about national security foreign policy and trade policy since 1945 Indeed they argue that from the 1940s to today the issue of how to control the transnational movement of information has been central to the thinking and actions of the guardians of the American national security state The expansion of control over knowledge and know how is apparent from the increasingly systematic inclusion of universities and research institutions into a system that in the 1950s and 1960s mainly targeted business activities As this book vividly reveals classification was not the only and not even the most important regulatory instrument that came into being in the postwar era
