economic competitiveness mounted in the 1980s so too did concerns that the nation's schools were not adequately preparing young people for the modern workplace. Spurred by widespread joblessness and job instability among young adults, the federal government launched ambitious educational reforms in the 1990s to promote career development activities for students. In recent years, however, the federal government has shifted its focus to test-based reforms like No Child Left Behind that emphasize purely academic subjects. At this critical juncture in education reform, Improving School To Work Transitions, edited by David Neumark, weighs the successes and failures of the 90s-era school-to-work initiatives and assesses how high schools, colleges, and government can help youths make a smoother transition into stable, well-paying employment. Drawing on evidence from national longitudinal studies, surveys, interviews, and case studies, the contributors to Improving School To Work Transitions offer thought-provoking perspectives on a variety of aspects of the school-to-work problem. Deborah Reed, Christopher Jepsen, and Laura Hill emphasize the importance of focusing school-to-work programs on the diverse needs of different demographic groups, particularly immigrants who represent a growing proportion of the youth population. David Neumark and Donna Rothstein investigate the impact of school-to-work programs on the forgotten half: students at the greatest risk of not attending college. Using data from the 1997 National Longitudinal Study of Youth, they find that participation by these students in programs like job shadowing, mentoring, and summer internships raises employment and college attendance rates among men and earnings among women. In a study of nine high schools with National Academy Foundation career academies, Terry Orr and her fellow researchers find that career academy participants are more engaged in school and are more likely to attend a four-year college than their peers. Nan Maxwell studies the skills demanded in entry-level jobs and finds that many supposedly low-skilled jobs actually demand extensive skills in reading, writing, and math, as well as the new basic skills of communication and problem-solving. Maxwell recommends that school districts collaborate with researchers to identify which skills are most in demand in their local labor markets. At a time when test-based educational reforms are making career development programs increasingly vulnerable, it is worth examining the possibilities and challenges of integrating career-related learning into the school environment. Written for educators, policymakers, researchers, and anyone concerned about how schools are shaping the economic opportunities of young people, Improving School To Work Transitions provides an authoritative guide to a crucial issue in education reform.

Rethinking School-to-Work Transitions in Australia Barry Down, John Smyth, Janean Robinson, 2018-01-08. This book draws on the stories of thirty-two young Australians to identify the barriers and obstacles they face in getting a job in precarious times and from their vantage point. It maps the kinds of educational policies and practices that need to be created and more widely sustained to assist their career aspirations and life chances. It is timely in terms of contributing to an alternative set of possibilities based on a commitment to the principles and values of social justice, respect, trust, care.

democracy and citizenship In constructing an alternative vision and practice for education and training it advocates the right of all young people to have a say in these broader public debates In pursuing this agenda it deliberately sets out to listen to what young people themselves have to say with a view to interrupting the way things are In other words the book seeks to identify and explain the dreams desires and aspirations of young people with a view to creating a new imaginary and socially just future
