Science In A Sea Of Commerce A Day By Da:

The People of the Sea Paul D'Arcy, 2006-03-31 Oceania is characterized by thousands of islands and archipelagoes amidst the vast expanse of the Pacific. Although it is one of the few truly oceanic habitats occupied permanently by humankind, surprisingly little research has been done on the maritime dimension of Pacific history. The People of the Sea attempts to fill this gap by combining neglected historical and scientific material to provide the first synthetic study of ocean people interaction in the region from 1770 to 1870. It emphasizes Pacific Islanders' varied and evolving relationships with the sea during a crucial transitional era following sustained European contact. Countering the dominant paradigms of recent Pacific Islands historiography which tend to limit understanding of the sea's importance, this volume emphasizes the flux in the maritime environment and how it instilled an expectation and openness toward outside influences and the rapidity with which cultural change could occur in relations between various Islander groups. The author constructs an extended and detailed conceptual framework to examine the ways in which the sea has framed and shaped Islander societies. He looks closely at Islanders' diverse responses to their ocean environment, including the sea in daily life, sea travel, and its infrastructure, maritime boundaries, protecting and contesting marine tenure, attitudes to unheralded seaborne arrivals, and conceptions of the world beyond the horizon and the willingness to voyage. He concludes by using this framework to reconsider the influence of the sea on historical processes in Oceania from 1770 to the present and discusses the implications of his findings for Pacific studies.

Science in a Sea of Commerce Samuel Stutchbury, 1996 4e de couv. The journal of Samuel Stutchbury is a day by day account of a voyage in the 1820s to the pearl islands of the Tuamotu Archipelago, a little known group lying eastward of Tahiti. It is the most vivid and detailed of the few surviving records of early 19th century pearling in the Pacific. It is the story of a commercial enterprise supported by investors from the City of London and from Sydney and based on the expertise of Colonial seamen but enlivened by the scientific observations made by Stutchbury. Samuel Stutchbury was a young man of 27 when he ventured into this little known region which was of great interest to scientists. He was a man of many parts in turn zoologist, geologist, botanist, doctor, interested in and informed about the whole range of natural phenomena which he encountered. His study of coral reefs certainly influenced Charles Lyell and Charles Darwin, and his papers on marine organisms caused controversy amongst English zoologists. While the main emphasis of the expedition was on matters in the central Pacific, there are interesting insights given in the journal into social and scientific aspects of life in New Zealand and New South Wales. Stutchbury's diary contains detailed observations of nature, including the weather, ships, and captains, the activities of missionaries and traders, social structure, and language in the Pacific.
