

severe international crisis. The existence of the neoliberal model in Brazil makes its economy vulnerable to the foreseeable ruin of the world economy.

As the world moves towards recession followed by economic depression, Brazil faces the obstacle represented by neoliberalism that has been devastating the country since 1990. The neoliberal economic model implemented in 1990 is largely responsible for leading Brazil to economic bankruptcy and gigantic social crisis today. The practice has been demonstrating the unfeasibility of the neoliberal economic model in Brazil inaugurated by President Fernando Collor in 1990 and maintained by Presidents Itamar Franco, Fernando Henrique Cardoso, Lula, Dilma Rousseff, Michel Temer and Jair Bolsonaro.

Brazil's main internal problem today is the stagnation of the economy with its consequences related to the closure of industries and commercial and service activities and, above all, the mass unemployment of 13 million workers and the underutilization of 28 million workers. President Bolsonaro and his ministers demonstrate that they are not effective managers as they do not spend their time working on what really matters to Brazil at the moment which is the reactivation of the economy and the fight against unemployment, do not focus their efforts on the desired results to the Brazilian people, which is the resumption of national development, and do not focus on the few large areas where superior execution will produce excellent results for the country, and do not outline strategies capable of eliminating or minimizing the impacts of global recession on the Brazilian economy.

To reactivate the Brazilian economy, the Bolsonaro government should preliminarily abandon the neoliberal economic model implemented in 1990 from which the federal government abdicated national economic planning. The neoliberal model, responsible for Brazil's economic debacle, should be replaced immediately by the national developmentalist model of selective openness of the Brazilian economy with active state participation in economic planning, as occurred in the 1930-1990 period when Brazil reached its greatest economic and social development. The analysis of Brazil's 10-year GDP growth rates from 1901 to 2010, projected from 2011 to 2020, undoubtedly shows that the best performance of the Brazilian economy with the highest growth rates occurred between 1930 and 1990, thanks to the active participation of the Brazilian state in promoting its development.

From 1990, the federal government abdicated from planning the national economy influenced by the neoliberal theses that considered that it was the market's responsibility to promote the expansion of the economy. From 1990 to 2016, Brazil had very low GDP growth rates. Between 2011 and 2020, the Brazilian economy should advance on average 0.9% per year, according to FGV. This rate is lower than the 1.6% of the so-called "lost decade" in the 1980s. In 2015 and 2016, for example, GDP grew negatively by 3.5% and 3.3%, respectively. It was a negative milestone for the country's economic history. Brazil had not had two consecutive years of recession since 1930 and 1931 when the world was affected by the effects of the 1929 economic crisis and the New York Stock Exchange crashed. Now Brazil is experiencing 3 years of recession with no prospect of a short-term solution. In the last two years, GDP has grown by only 1.1%. These numbers demonstrate the failure of neoliberalism from 1990 to the present time in Brazil. It is, therefore, an act of homeland damage to maintain the harmful neoliberal economic model for Brazil.
