Using the Biological Literature Diane Schmidt, 2014-04-14 The biological sciences cover a broad array of literature types from younger fields like molecular biology with its reliance on recent journal articles, genomic databases and protocol manuals to classic fields such as taxonomy with its scattered literature found in monographs and journals from the past three centuries. Using the Biological Literature: A Practical Guide, Fourth Edition is an annotated guide to selected resources in the biological sciences, presenting a wide-ranging list of important sources. This completely revised edition contains numerous new resources and descriptions of all entries, including textbooks. The guide emphasizes current materials in the English language and includes retrospective references for historical perspective and to provide access to the taxonomic literature. It covers both print and electronic resources, including monographs, journals, databases, indexes and abstracting tools, websites and associations, providing users with listings of authoritative informational resources of both classical and recently published works. With chapters devoted to each of the main fields in the basic biological sciences, this book offers a guide to the best and most up-to-date resources in biology. It is appropriate for anyone interested in searching the biological literature, from undergraduate students to faculty researchers and librarians. The guide includes a supplementary website dedicated to keeping URLs of electronic and web-based resources up to date, a popular feature continued from the third edition.

Toward a Phenomenology of the Etheric World Jochen Bockemühl, 1985 For more than three centuries, scientists have studied the world as detached observers. In doing so, science has achieved marvelous results, but it has also lost the sense of the whole that earlier cultures possessed. By concentrating on the text of the physical world, science has lost the context, the etheric world of life forces. Goethean phenomenology, so named for Goethe's observations, is a scientific method capable of bringing the clarity of natural science to this context of phenomena. Unconsciously, scientific observers have always been using the context to read the text. The phenomenological method involves training observers to look at the activity of thinking itself as it perceives intentionally. It then uses this activity itself as a means of perception. The observer thus becomes conscious that physical nature is indeed a text and that its meaning derives from the etheric context. Unlike the more common hypothetical and deductive methods, which presuppose a detached observer, the phenomenological method is based on active participation by the observer. This eliminates the need to construct speculative hypotheses; the observer's awareness of his or her own intentionality ensures the veracity of the observations. The etheric world is not a new hypothesis; it is, however, a new domain of observation. The authors Jochen Bockemühl, Christof Lindenau, Georg Maier, Ernst August Müller, Hermann Poppelbaum, Dietrich Rapp, and Wolfgang Schad have all written extensively on participatory science and related matters. In this groundbreaking collection, they each explore an aspect of the etheric world and its relationship to human thinking. They systematically lead the reader into the formative movements of nature and offer genuine insight into the far-reaching mystery
