A Man Divided Olaf Stapledon, 2015-10-29 Probing the recurrent themes and images of Stapledon's novels which include Last and First Men, Odd John, Star Maker, and Sirius, Leslie A. Fiedler brilliantly illuminates the complexity and richness that underlie Stapledon's fiction. As Fiedler demonstrates, Stapledon was very much a product of the 1930s, embracing a set of leftist attitudes that were common to many other Oxbridge-educated sons of the English upper classes. But as Fiedler further shows, there is much more to Stapledon's books than their superficial ideological content; his works are unique in their awe-inspiring vision of the breadth of the physical universe and the depths of the human psyche. Certainly, since encountering him, Fiedler writes, "I have never been able to stare up at the night sky with the same secure faith that either God exists or he does not anymore than I have been able, between sleeping and waking, to be sure that the nighttime I am preparing to dream is identical with or totally different from the conscious I about to surrender its dominion." While placing both Stapledon and his apocalyptic ideas in the context of his times, Fiedler argues that Stapledon's obsession with personal mortality and the limits of the ego are at the center of all his work.
