Intersectionality in the Arts Psychotherapies Jessica Collier, Corrina Eastwood, 2022-01-21 Intersectionality in the Arts Psychotherapies advocates for contextualising of clinical thinking and experience within a social and political framework that acknowledges the importance of intersectionality Bringing reflections on their own identity and their professional knowledge to the work creative therapists address both practical work with clients and the theory behind these therapeutic practices A call to reflexivity allows the reader to consider their own position as a practitioner These chapters will challenge and develop thinking on intersectional identities Beyond the individual the book demonstrates the need to embed knowledge of intersectionality in the profession at large Experienced practitioners write from diverse perspectives across the arts psychotherapies exploring how structures of power privilege and prejudice influence practice and outcomes

Art Therapy with Self-mutilating Adolescents Heather J. Bonitz, 2003 Abstract Self mutilation has been described as being one of the most difficult issues to address in therapy and as one of the most traumatic and emotionally draining for the therapist It is most common in teenage girls and women and often emerges during adolescence It often becomes a lifelong problem for many individuals with treatment being difficult to find for these individuals Many therapists will turn them away or the client may be embarrassed or reluctant to seek treatment There are various emotions that accompany this behavior as well as additional high risk behaviors that must be addressed in treatment Among treatment options available to these individuals is art therapy It addresses the nonverbal level of communication that these individuals feel and then encourages verbal associations to images It is less threatening and empowers the individual by giving them control over their creative expression Two case studies are presented demonstrating the effectiveness of art therapy with self mutilating adolescents in residential treatment It has enabled them to become more active participants in their treatment and encouraged verbal processing and associations to images revealing repressed feelings and traumatic experiences
