Self And Social Identity:

Self, Social Identity, and Physical Health Richard J. Contrada, Richard D. Ashmore, 1999-03-04 Despite tremendous progress in understanding the human body as a biological mechanism researchers are finding that many aspects of physical health are strongly linked to a person's thoughts, emotions, and behaviors and to features of the sociocultural environment. This interdisciplinary volume, the newest in the Rutgers Series on Self and Social Identity, provides a survey of this research, emphasizing the connections between health and an individual's sense of self. Drawing on psychology, sociology, and anthropology, the collection examines the health-related effects both of broad social forces and of individual experiences. Part I examines the diverse systems involved, moving from the biological and psychological systems in the individual to such societal systems as language, politics, economics, and health care. Part II focuses on stress and emotion and includes an extensive discussion of race-related stress and of the beneficial effects of disclosing and talking about individual traumatic events. Part III addresses health in the context of personality and development, proposing a multilevel view of personality and describing the emergence of sexual identities during adolescence. The final part then looks at the other side of the self-health relationship by examining the effects of illness on one's sense of self. As a whole, the collection provides a wide-ranging survey of existing work on how self and health are linked and is a valuable source of ideas for future research. Self and Identity

Richard D. Ashmore, Lee Jussim, 1997-05-15 Self and identity have been important yet volatile notions in psychology since its formative years as a scientific discipline. Recently, psychologists and other social scientists have begun to develop and refine the conceptual and empirical tools for studying the complex nature of self. This volume presents a critical analysis of fundamental issues in the scientific study of self and identity. These chapters go much farther than merely taking stock of recent scientific progress. World-class social scientists from psychology, sociology, and anthropology present new and contrasting perspectives on these fundamental issues. Topics include the personal versus social nature of self and identity, multiplicity of selves versus unity of identity, and the societal, cultural, and historical formation and expression of selves. These creative contributions provide new insights into the major issues involved in understanding self and identity. As the first volume in the Rutgers Series on Self and Social Identity, the book sets the stage for a productive second century of scientific analysis and heightened understanding of self and identity. Scholars and advanced students in the social sciences will find this highly informative and provocative reading. Dr. Richard D. Ashmore is a professor and Dr. Lee Jussim is an associate professor in the Department of Psychology at Rutgers University, New Brunswick, New Jersey. Self and Social Identity

The Self in Social Judgment Mark D. Alicke, David A. Dunning, Joachim Krueger, 2013-05-13

The volume begins with a historical overview of the self in social judgment and outlines the major issues. Subsequent chapters, all written by leading experts in their respective areas, identify and elaborate four major themes regarding the self in social judgment: the role of the self as an information source for evaluating others or what has been called social projection; the assumption of personal superiority as reflected in the pervasive tendency for people to view their characteristics more favorably than those of others; the role of the self as a comparison standard from or toward which other people's behaviors and attributes are assimilated or contrasted; the relative weight people place on the individual and collective selves in defining their attributes and comparing them to those of other people.

Social Psychology: Social Identity Gary Elliott, 2014-06-30

Seminar paper from the year 2013 in the subject Psychology, Social Psychology, Atlantic International University, language: English, abstract: The content of this paper discusses three separate yet in my opinion interlinked aspects of social development. We begin with the concept of social identity: the development of one's identity almost from birth through adolescence into adulthood. The identity as a result of our interactions with those around us creates our self concept and ultimately our self esteem. Our gender and gender role development adds to our concept of self and determines our concept of who we are in relation to others and the world. As we grow, our interactions with those around us, commencing with the family unit, gives credence to our understanding of our self value. We learn about people's perceptions of us through their dealings with us. As such, our self esteem has the potential to promote or hinder healthy relationship development as we move through life from the core family relationships to our peer, significant other and spousal relationships. The success or failure of our relationships can be linked to our self esteem. We learn about our self perception: how others perceive us and what kind of responses we expect from those we come into contact with. Dealing with our self esteem as we move through life suggests that interactions are tainted or coloured by a positive or negative self concept respectively. We will see that perception is a key determinant in the generation of frustration when dealing with those around us. These frustrations are just one component of factors that may lead to the expression of inappropriate levels of aggression. We discuss other causes of aggression and ultimately seek to outline techniques that can assist individuals to create a less aggressive or more appropriate form of anger display As an educator the focus of this paper has pertinence for the school environment but is not limited and moves beyond that into the world of work Individuality and the Group Tom Postmes,Jolanda
