

WIND OF THE CHANGES

By [illegible]

When I was a young girl, I used to sit on the porch and watch the wind blow through the trees. I would wonder what it was doing, where it was going. I would think about the things it was carrying with it, the leaves, the seeds, the dust. I would think about the things it was leaving behind, the empty branches, the quiet street. I would think about the things it was doing to me, the way it made me feel, the way it made me think.

The wind is a powerful force, and it is always changing. It is always blowing in different directions, and it is always carrying different things with it. It is always doing different things to the things it touches, and it is always leaving different things behind. It is always doing different things to me, and it is always leaving different things behind. It is always doing different things to the world, and it is always leaving different things behind.
