Cancer Markers Stewart Sell, 2012-12-06 Developmental cancer products oncodevelopmental markers ODM not only serve as diagnostic and prognostic indicators but also may be used to study the nature of the carcinogenic process and the biology of tumors For many years oncologists have searched for markers of cancer cells that would permit unequivocal recognition of cancer in contrast to noncancerous tissue

The earliest and still most widely used method of identification of cancer tissue or cells is the structural resemblance of cancer tissue to fetal or immature tissue. Pathologists not only recognize cancer by its morphologic similarity to fetal tissues but also in many instances can relate the behavior of a given tumor to the degree of tissue differentiation. Thus poorly differentiated tumors that resemble fetal tissue generally grow more rapidly and metastasize earlier than do well differentiated tumors that more closely resemble adult tissue. In recent years the commonality of fetal and cancer tissue has been extended to products of tumor cells that can be analyzed by biochemical, immunological or physiological techniques. Increasingly products of cancer cells similar to fetal products are being identified and studied. These products range from cell surface markers, fetal or differentiation antigens, placental proteins, hormones and isoenzymes to a multitude of products such as carcinoembryonic antigen (CEA), alpha-fetoprotein (AFP), lymphocyte markers and nucleic acids such as tRNA that are produced in small amounts by vi continuously differentiating cells in the adult but in much greater amounts by tumors.

Structural Elements of the Nervous System Abel Lajtha, 2013-03-09 Neurochemistry having the objective of elucidating biochemical processes subserving nervous activity emerged as an application of chemistry to the neurobiological problems as a post World War II phenomenon. Investigation, however, only in the last 40 years has the chemical community recognized neurochemistry as a distinct if hybrid discipline. During this period great strides have been made. However, recently neurochemistry along with neurophysiology, neuropharmacology, neuroanatomy and the behavioral sciences has emerged to form neuroscience, a new community of scientists with its own national society, journals and meetings. Actually this recently formed hybrid neuroscience is in the process of merging with another well established discipline, molecular genetics, frequently called molecular biology and itself a hybrid which appears to have sufficient hybrid vigor to form yet a new community of scientists which for want of a more imaginative term has been called molecular genetic neuroscience. Clearly advantages resulting from such mergers or hybridizations accrue not only from the merging discipline, neurochemistry in this case to the new community, molecular genetic neuroscience but also in the reverse direction. This Foreword will be concerned primarily with examples of this latter process.
