

CHAPTER I

On a snowy morning, three days before Christmas in 1885, five men gather in a small gas-lit office on the sixth floor of Cyrus Hall McCormick's Reaper Block in the heart of Chicago's teeming business district.

They have come together to formalize the start of a new business for which a state charter was granted twelve days earlier. Foremost among them are the Goss brothers—Fred, a printing plant foreman with the flair of a master salesman, and Sam, a pressman in a plant that turns out colorful posters advertising circuses and train excursions—and Jacob Walser, a well-to-do railroad ticket broker who is the main financial backer of the Gosses' inventive plan to produce a new and improved kind of newspaper printing press. The others are Benjamin Babcock, a local periodical publisher, and David Alland, an attorney representing the interests of Babcock's independently wealthy wife, Julia, a major outside investor in the Gosses' enterprise.

The men stand about for a time talking about the wintry weather and politics, particularly about how President Grover Cleveland, the first Democrat in the White House in 24 years, continues to replace Republican job-holders with loyalists in his own party. They take an occasional look out a window at John Van Osdel's recently-built County Building-City Hall across the street, where buoyant Mayor Carter Harrison reigns after his re-election in April for an unprecedented fourth term, in a city where corruption and gambling still flourish along with raucous complaints from reformers and newspapers, but also a city whose remarkable resurgence from the ravages of the Great Fire of 1871 has not slackened, in spite of periodic economic woes and rumbles of intensified conflict between labor and capital.

Walser asks the others to seat themselves at the heavy oak table in the center of the room and calls the meeting to order. On Fred Goss' unopposed motion, Walser is chosen chairman of the meeting and, on Babcock's motion, Fred its secretary.

"The first order of business," declares

One of the early logotypes of the company formed by Frederick and Samuel Goss, with the financial backing of Jacob Walser.

there is no guarantee that tomorrow will come how would you answer the question Am I proud of today The Proud Self Lorenzo Greco,2025-05-30 This book presents a novel interpretation of Hume as a proponent of sentimental virtue ethics This interpretation sheds light on the nature of Hume s ethics as well as its relevance for contemporary debates in moral philosophy The book starts by developing an understanding of the self in Hume based on the passion of pride Contrary to the common view that Hume denies the unity of the self by diluting it into a bundle or collection of different perceptions the author argues that by focusing on pride it is possible to identify in Hume a firm notion of the self as having a sentimental nature that can be explained in narrative terms Pivoting on this narrative self he shows how it accounts for the Humean notion of the virtuous person by holding together in a harmonious whole several central issues in Hume s moral philosophy including sympathy the point of view from which we make moral judgements the practical nature of ethics and the role that reflection plays in it and the definition of perfect character Finally the author maintains that Humean virtue ethics so understood has the individual at its core representing a secular and pluralist alternative to neo Aristotelian versions discussed today The Proud Self will appeal to scholars and graduate students working on Hume 18th century philosophy
