

FUNCIÓN PRINCIPAL.

La función principal del ADN consiste en transmitir los genes, es decir los caracteres biológicos de un individuo determinado. En los genes del ADN están grabadas las instrucciones necesarias para la construcción de un individuo completo, al igual que los planos de una casa contienen indicaciones precisas para su construcción. Siguiendo estas instrucciones, cada célula es capaz de sintetizar sus proteínas y de adoptar la forma y función que le corresponden dentro del organismo. 1

COMPOSICIÓN Y ESTRUCTURA DEL ADN

La molécula de ADN es una larga doble hélice enrollada sobre sí misma, semejante a una escalera de caracol. En ella, dos ramales compuestos de moléculas de azúcar (desoxirribosa) y fosfatos, se conectan gracias al apareamiento de cuatro moléculas denominadas bases, las cuales forman los eslabones de la escalera. Estas cadenas formadas por cuatro nucleótidos distintos, compuestos además por un azúcar (la desoxirribosa), un ácido fosfórica, y una de las siguientes bases nitrogenadas: adenina (A), guanina (G), citosina (C) o timina (T).

En los eslabones, la adenina se aparea con la timina y la guanina con la citosina. Así un enlace de hidrógeno. Un gen es segmento de un ADN, que tiene una determinada función y está constituido por una secuencia específica de bases. 1
