Microeconomic Issues of Labor Markets in Developing Countries Dipak Mazumdar, 1989-01-01 This paper deals with labor market structures in developing countries and the impact of government policies on rural and urban labor markets The central concern in analyses of employment is absorption of labor Governments try to influence the demand for labor so that more members of the labor force are absorbed into productive employment Employment outcomes are often the by products of government policies that affect economic growth as a whole This paper concentrates on factors that influence the structure and functioning of labor markets In Chapter 1 a schematic picture of labor markets is presented Chapters 2 and 3 analyze the salient features of the workings of rural and urban labor markets and discuss some important government policies that affect the functioning of these markets The paper concludes that Government intervention in both rural and urban labor markets has often been less than successful sometimes because their policies were based on incorrect assumptions At other times these policies have achieved less because the government also adopted other policies that tended to contradict the goal of providing jobs      China's Labor Market in the "New Normal" Mr. Waikei W. Lam, Xiaoguang Liu, Mr. Alfred Schipke, 2015-07-13 As China implements reforms under the new normal maintaining stability in the labor market is a priority The country's demography and labor dynamics are changing after benefitting in past decades from ample cheap labor So far the labor market appears to be resilient even as growth slows driven in part by expansion of the services sector Migrant flows and possible labor hoarding in overcapacity sectors may also help explain this Yet while the latter two factors help serve as shock absorbers contributing to labor market stability in the short term if they persist they may delay the needed adjustment process contributing to an inefficient allocation of resources and curtailing productivity gains This paper quantifies to what extent structural trends and the reform pace affect employment growth under the new normal Delays in reform implementation would weaken growth prospects in the medium term running the risk that job creation will fall below policy targets leading to labor market pressures in the future In contrast successful transition might require faster reforms including in the overcapacity and state owned enterprise sectors supported by well targeted social safety nets
