Choosing Rural Road Investments to Help Reduce Poverty Dominique P. van de Walle, 2016

A change in the transport sector's current approach to selecting rural road investments is warranted A proposed approach builds on some of the poverty focused hybrid methods found in recent rural road appraisals recognizing that an important share of the benefits to the poor from rural roads cannot be measured in monetary terms Van de Walle examines how rural road investment projects should be selected and appraised when the objective is poverty reduction After critically reviewing past and current practices van de Walle develops an operational approach grounded in a public economics framework in which concerns of equity and efficiency are inseparable information is incomplete in important ways and resources are limited She addresses a key problem that an important share of the benefits to the poor from rural roads cannot be measured in monetary terms The selection formula she proposes aims to identify places where poverty and economic potential are high and access is low She illustrates the method using data for and project experience in Vietnam Among the advantages of proceeding as outlined in her proposal This approach holds the hope of building capacity and is participatory it extracts local information that may not be readily available to the central government and it appears to be feasible because it relies on local authorities participating in the appraisal of subprojects This paper a product of Public Economics Development Research Group is part of a larger effort in the group to study the impact of transport and other physical infrastructure on poverty Copies of the paper are available free from the World Bank 1818 H Street NW Washington DC 20433 The author may be contacted at dvandewalle@worldbank.org

Development, Economic Growth, and Poverty Reduction in China Shenggen Fan, Connie Chan-Kang, 2005-01-01 Since 1985 the Chinese government has given high priority to building roads particularly high quality roads that connect industrial centers This report evaluates the contribution roads have made to poverty reduction and economic growth in China over the last two decades It disaggregates road infrastructure into different classes to account for differences in their quality and then estimates the impact of road investments on overall economic growth agricultural growth urban growth urban poverty reduction and rural poverty reduction The report makes the case for a greater focus on low quality and rural roads in future infrastructure investment strategies in China It does so by showing how investing in low quality and rural roads will generate larger marginal returns raise more people out of poverty per yuan invested and reduce regional development disparity more sharply than investing in high quality roads The study's findings will have considerable implications for China's infrastructure policy

Income Distribution and Employment Programme John Howe, 1981 Basic Needs and Employment P.J. Richards, M.A. El-Hawary, T.Y. El-Reedy, 1982 Rural Roads and Poverty Reduction in Baringo District Kenneth K. Odero, 1992 The Poverty Impact of Rural Roads Shahidur R. Khandker, Zaid Bakht, Gayatri B. Koolwal, 2006 The rationale for public investment in rural roads is that households can better exploit agricultural and nonagricultural opportunities to use labor and capital more efficiently But significant knowledge gaps remain as to how opportunities provided by roads actually filter back into household outcomes and their distributional consequences This paper examines the impacts of rural road projects using household level panel data from Bangladesh Rural road investments are found to reduce poverty significantly through higher agricultural production higher wages lower input and transportation costs and higher output prices Rural roads also lead to higher girls and boys schooling Road investments are pro poor meaning the gains are proportionately higher for the poor than for the non poor
