Prothrombin and Related Coagulation Factors H.C. Hemker,J.J. Veltkamp,1975-07-31 One of the most fascinating tools at the disposal of the molecular biologist is the medical clinic The responsibilities of those who provide health care do not stop when they give optimal care to the individual patient and train their successors adequately They also are under the obligation to obtain maximal information from every case they treat in order to reach a better understanding of the underlying illness in order to improve therapeutic results in the next patient Fundamental research in pathological material is therefore a medical must as well as an opportunity for scientific work The scientist working in this field can profit from nature s unasked for experiments which are encountered by his medical colleagues in their clinical material There are many examples of subjects of study for instance hemoglobins and immunoglobulins which started in a medical context and gradually developed into a field of prime interest for the molecular biologist The study of blood coagulation is one of the younger areas of this kind Subject Catalog Library of Congress, Monographic Series Library of Congress,1976

Human Blood Coagulation H.C. Hemker,E.A. Loelinger,J.J. Veltkamp,2012-12-06 Since 1952 postgraduate courses for practising physicians and specialists have been given by the Medical Faculty of the University of Leiden in the Boerhaave Quarter in which most of its clinics and laboratories are located During these years recent advances in a wide variety of medical fields and subjects have been discussed by distinguished speakers from many countries The steadily increasing attendance has shown that as could be expected from the rapid progress of modern medicine there is a widely felt need for this form of postgraduate study In 1957 therefore the Leiden Medical Faculty appointed a permanent committee for the organization of postgraduate medical education Of the courses given since then certain material proved to have sufficient immediate scientific value to justify publication and it now gives the Committee great pleasure to announce that in collaboration with the Leiden University Press it will publish the Boerhaave Series for Postgraduate Medical Education The first volume of this new series is the product of the course on Human Blood Coagulation given in November 1968 It is our hope that this book will prove valuable not only to those who participated in the course but also to many others working in this and associated fields Library of Congress Catalogs Library of Congress,1977 Subject Catalog, 1976 Library of Congress,1976 Heparin Vijay Vir Kakkar,Duncan P. Thomas,1976 Bone Scintigraphy Ernest K. J. Pauwels,Henri E. Schütte,Wybren K. Taconis,1981 The Ventricular Septum of the Heart A.C.G. Wenink,A. Oppenheimer-Dekker,A. Moulart,1981-11-30 There continue to be disagreements concerning the embryology of the ventricular septum and the nomenclature of its various parts as well as on its phylogenetic derivation It must be obvious that until such time as these uncertainties have been resolved it will not be possible to understand the pathogenesis of ventricular septal defects and other anomalies involving the ventricular septum In an effort to clarify some of these difficulties a number of individuals including anatomists embryologists pathologists cardiologists and surgeons all acknowledged experts in their respective fields of endeavor were invited to present their views and concepts in sessions devoted to the ventricular septum. In this Boerhaave Course detailed descriptions of the normal anatomy, embryology and phylogeny of the septum were followed by papers on ventricular septal defects, atrioventricular defects straddling valves and various forms of univentricular heart. Major contributions were made through clinical accounts of these anomalies. This course again clearly demonstrated the value of and the need for a multidisciplinary approach to the recognition, understanding, diagnosis and management of congenital cardiac disease. While obviously it could not be expected that all of the problems and uncertainties concerning the normal and abnormal ventricular septum would be resolved, the lively and frank discussions among all participants of the course undoubtedly contributed to a better understanding of the still existing difficulties. All of the contributors to this monograph should be congratulated for a job superbly well done.

Quantification of Circulating Proteins Wim Th. Hermens, George M. Willems, Marja P. Visser, 1982-11-30. Less than 50 years ago it was discovered that steady state protein concentrations in plasma are the net result of continuous elimination and synthesis of protein molecules. The first quantitative studies on the turnover and distribution of plasma proteins were made around 1950 after the introduction of radio-labeled protein preparations. Around 1970 another development in quantitative interpretation of circulating proteins was initiated in clinical enzymology. Estimation of cumulative release into plasma of cellular enzymes can be helpful in a variety of diseases to assess the extent of tissue damage and to evaluate therapy. Enzymes can be considered as biological tracers; i.e. minute quantities of protein can be accurately determined by their specific catalytic activities. However, radioactive tracers permit direct estimates of turnover and distribution by measurement of excreted radioactivity, possibilities that are not available for enzymes. Consequently only a few techniques used in tracer studies with radiolabeled proteins can be applied to circulating tissue enzymes and this may explain the lack of communication between the fields of plasma protein metabolism and quantitative clinical enzymology. In the present study a summary is given of the basic methods used in both fields with emphasis on the equivalence of various models and formalisms used by different authors. It is shown that major limitations in the study of circulating tissue enzymes can be overcome if two different but simultaneously released enzymes can be measured. The resulting method will also be applied to plasma protein metabolism.
