coast of Crete The book focuses on the excavation and interpretation of the architecture and material culture in Block AF This southern group of buildings is one of the most important areas in the settlement because of its long succession of building phases Block AF provides the fullest sequence of building phases from any one area at Pseira with habitation extending from before MM II to LM III It has examples of complex architectural details including a pillar crypt elaborate upstairs floors a well preserved U shaped staircase and a well designed kitchen all of which contribute significantly to our knowledge of East Cretan building practices In addition to domestic pottery the houses furnish examples of stone tools stone vessels loom weights inscriptions in Linear A cult objects animal bones marine shells and a wide range of material recovered from water sieving This latter category with burned grain fish bones shells and other categories of materials fills many gaps in our knowledge of Pseiran life

The Dams and Water Management Systems of Minoan Pseira Philip P.

Betancourt, 2012-12-31 Excavations at the Bronze Age seaport on Pseira Island uncovered the remains of sophisticated water retention systems that included the addition of retaining walls to prevent erosion massive dams with associated reservoirs and small check dams to ravines that reached over one hundred meters in length in order to control water runoff and make it available for human use Agriculture was one of the cornerstones of the Bronze Age Cretan economy and it is no surprise that the ancient inhabitants of the island went to great lengths to control water runoff and make it available for human use Despite the application of traditional archaeological survey methods the full extent of the water management systems was not understood fully as the island's rugged topography prevented intensive and thorough survey of many places The use of a differential Global Positioning System dGPS unit provided the opportunity to take a fresh look at the evidence for water management on the island The results of this study contribute substantial amounts of new information on the little known subject of Minoan water conservation and control expansion of the nearby town in LM I It also demonstrates that the cemetery was larger than the area suggested by the 33 tombs found by Seager and it shows that the customs included burial in jars even though no examples have been excavated

Crafting Minoanisation Joanne Elizabeth Cutler,2021-10-31 The mid second millennium BC material record of the southern Aegean shows evidence of strong Cretan influence This phenomenon has traditionally been seen in terms of Minoanisation but the nature and degree of Cretan influence and the process processes by which it was spread and adopted have been widely debated This new study addresses the question of Minoanisation through a study of the adoption of Cretan technologies in the wider southern Aegean principally weaving technology By the early Late Bronze Age Cretan style discoid loom weights had appeared at a number of settlements across the southern Aegean In most cases this represents not only the adoption of a particular type of loom weight but also the introduction of a new weaving technology the use of the warp weighted loom The evidence for and the implications of the adoption of this new technology is examined Drawing upon recent advances in textile experimental archaeology the types of textiles that are likely to have been produced at a range of sites both on Crete itself and in the wider southern Aegean are discussed and the likely nature and scale of textile production at the various settlements is assessed. A consideration of the evidence for the timing and extent of the adoption of Cretan weaving technology in the light of additional evidence for the adoption of other Cretan technologies is used to gain insight into the potential social and economic strategies engaged in by various groups across the southern Aegean as well as the motivations that may have driven the adoption and adaptation of Cretan cultural traits and accompanying behaviors. By examining how technological skills and techniques are learned and considering possible mechanisms for the transmission of such technical knowledge and know how new perspectives can be proposed concerning the processes through which Cretan techniques were taken up and imitated abroad.

Pseira III Cheryl R. Floyd, Philip P. Betancourt, Costis Davaras, 2015-09-30 The Pseira project began in 1985. Excavations were conducted from 1986 to 1991 as an American Greek collaboration directed by Philip P. Betancourt and Costis Davaras. The Plateia Building (Building BS BV) is located at the north of the Town Square or Plateia. It occupies the entire northern side of the square with one room built on the eastern side as well. The structure is the largest building excavated at Pseira. The building was discovered by small tests made in 1986 and it was excavated in subsequent seasons. From the beginning the building was recognized as an important structure in the town. Its excavation was conducted slowly and meticulously with careful attention to the proper recovery and recording of its data. University Museum Monograph 102.

They were produced in a wide range of forms and media with a consistently high degree of craftsmanship. This comprehensive study of Bronze Age rhyta from the Aegean builds on nearly a century of discoveries and scholarly contributions and addresses questions of typology, function, context, and the uses of these vessels. The volume includes a thoroughly illustrated catalogue, an index of sites, and the present locations of rhyta.

Kavousi I Donald C. Haggis, 2005-12-30 Kavousi I is the initial volume of the Kavousi Excavation Series, which presents the final report of the Kavousi Project, a program of archaeological investigation near the modern village of Kavousi in eastern Crete. Subsequent volumes will publish the results of the 1987-1992 excavations at the Vronda and Kastro sites in the Siteia Mountains overlooking Kavousi, and of the cleaning and new study of the excavations of Harriet Boyd in 1900 and 1901. This volume, Kavousi I: The Archaeological Survey of the Kavousi Region, provides a comprehensive look at the topography of the area, its natural resources, and the way in which the local people interacted with them over time, as shown in the changing pattern of settlement.
