Population Change and Rural Society William A. Kandel, David L. Brown, 2006-10-12 CALVIN L. BEALE In considering how to introduce the subject of rural population change in st the 21 Century I nd myself re ecting on my own experience as a demographer for the U S Department of Agriculture When I arrived at the Department the post World War II modernization of farming was well under way Each year my colleague Gladys Bowles and I had the unpopular task of announcing how much the farm population had decreased in the prior year It was hard to say that the phenomenon was someone s fault Dramatic reductions in labor requirements per unit of agricultural output were occurring everywhere and not just in the United States But politically blame had to be assigned and whichever political party was not in the White House was certain to place the blame squarely on the current administration The demographic consequences of this trend were major In a 22 year period from 1941 to 1962 the net loss of farm population from migration and cessation of farming averaged over a million people per year It took eight years after the war before an administration was willing to begin to talk about the need to diversify rural employment By that time farm residents had already become a minority of rural people However well into the 1970s I continued to receive inquiries from people who still equated rural with farm or who could not envision what rural nonfarm people did for a living
