Johnson,1973 "Just Before a Mighty Earthquake" ,2010 This work discusses three counties in Georgia during the secession crisis from Abraham Lincoln s election in November 1860 until Georgia seceded from the Union in January 1861 The focus of this paper originally began with Thomas County Georgia the only county in southwest Georgia not to vote for secession Research began with the simple idea of finding out why Thomas County s citizens opposed secession Dougherty and Muscogee counties were included to add a broader scope to the research and make the paper more useful for comparison to other counties in Georgia By using methodology consist with historical research the conclusion of this paper is that the secession debate in Georgia was simply a continuation of the political fighting between Democrats and Whigs that had occurred in the state since the 1830s Thus political allegiance played a vital role in determining support for or opposition to secession in these three counties And the War Came Kenneth Milton Stampp,1964 The Three Secession Movements in the United States William P.
