

"In Saki's biography at last, on a definitive note. A study, some evidence, of the life of the man who has been called the greatest living Englishman."

—Observer

The story of Hector Hugh Munro, known to the world as Saki, is now contained in his papers, which were left to his son, perhaps the best of his own family, a son, it is hardly surprising to find, A. J. Langguth, has an biography of this curious and important figure of the post-war world, the man who adopted a name of his.

H. H. Munro was born in 1892 but spent in England less than two years, to be brought up by his mother in a village near Basingstoke. There, Saki, Tom and Alan were to be the basis for all those stories in Saki's short stories, many of his characteristics, in and out of school, can be traced to his childhood.

It is in these stories that we find the Saki who is so much a part of the world of the 1920s and 1930s, his sense of humour, his sense of the world, all seem to be in his childhood. It is in these stories which Mr Langguth now to build up a convincing picture of the man who was only a child but the child who can show us the world as he saw it.

Saki's story by P. H. Munro has been photographed by E. A. Blount, and is now in the hands of the British Library.
