

Peer Review at Health Affairs

Health Affairs is the nation's leading peer-reviewed journal of health policy thought and research. Its mission is to serve as a high-level, nonpartisan forum to promote analysis and discussion on improving health and health care. Peer review is used by scholarly publishers to integrate external expert opinion into the process of selecting and improving manuscripts prior to publication. This infographic provides a look into the peer review process at Health Affairs from article submission to publication, what editors and reviewers look for, and why it's important.

THE PROCESS

WHAT REVIEWERS DO

Health Affairs uses a double-blind review system, meaning reviewers do not know the names of authors, and authors do not know the identities of reviewers.

Reviewers are asked to comment on several aspects of a paper, including the overall clarity of the presentation; the value of the contribution; appropriateness of the data and methods; interpretation of the results; and alignment between the research question, data and methods, evidence presented, and conclusions.

They are also asked to make a recommendation to the editors on whether or not the work shows enough promise to pursue through revision.

Health Affairs is ranked

#1 out of 88

journals in Clarivate's Health Policy & Services Category (2021)

* Impact Factor measures the frequency of citations of a journal in the scholarly literature, which is one indication of quality and reflects the value of and trust in peer review.

WHO ARE THE REVIEWERS

Peer reviewers are subject matter experts who volunteer their time to review articles, which helps to ensure the scientific integrity, quality, and relevance of published work; this vetting process builds trust among readers.

Editors identify reviewers through group discussions, their own experiences, and researching other publications.

Peer review is managed via an online manuscript management system ("Editorial Manager") that streamlines editorial processes by integrating communication, task management, record-keeping, and file storage and retrieval in one system.

WHY IT'S IMPORTANT

- Peer review is crucial to helping journals maintain high quality standards and meeting reader demands for timely, relevant, and trustworthy information.
- Peer reviewers are the lifeblood of scholarly publishing, offering their time and expertise to aid editorial decision making, ensure scientific integrity, and improve the quality of published work.
- The peer review process promotes community participation in the generation of knowledge that serves the policy and research communities.
- The process aids in the professional development and education of all parties involved—reviewers, authors, and editors—by exposing each to new ideas and insights and providing opportunities to test and improve those ideas.
