Key findings

- The care of a substantial proportion of patients undergoing surgery and anaesthesia in independent hospitals is funded by the NHS.
- Only 13% of the 314 independent hospitals contacted by NAMPs agreed to take part. The reasons cited by those unable to take part included the difficulties associated with communicating with the large number of consultant anaesthetists with practising privileges and the lack of an 'anaesthetic department'.
- The NHS and other organisations funding the care of patients in independent sector hospitals should work with regulators and inspectors to ensure that all independent hospitals are included in national audits and registers.
- As very few independent sector hospitals reported to NAMPs, the data are unlikely to be representative of the sector, so we excluded the data from formal numerical analysis.
- We are unable to comment either on the frequency of perioperative anaesthesia in independent hospitals, or on the adequacy of its management or investigation.
- Those cases that were reported to NAMPs showed that life-threatening perioperative anaesthesia may occur in independent hospitals.
- Solo anaesthetists, isolated locations, the lack of critical care facilities, the potential need to transfer patients to another hospital, and the lack of integrated allergy clinics all present unique challenges to those managing these events in independent sector hospitals.

Introduction

Independent sector hospitals provide a parallel healthcare service to NHS hospitals in the UK. Traditionally, these hospitals provided care for fee-paying and insured patients. More recently, increasing numbers of NHS-funded patients have had surgery in independent sector hospitals, based initially on the 'any willing provider' scheme introduced in 2009, which became 'any qualified provider' in 2011.

Since 2015, NHS patients undergoing surgery have a choice of providers, through NHS Choices (<https://www.nhs.uk/choices/>) and the NHS e-Referral Service. This system replaced 'Choose and Book', which was established in 2005. In 2016, the UK government committed to extending choice for patients (Department of Health 2017).

In 2007, it was reported that 45% of in-patients in independent sector hospitals are NHS-funded, and that in a quarter of private hospitals this number exceeds 50% (CHP 2017). NHS-funded patients receiving care in independent sector hospitals should receive the same quality of routine and emergency care as NHS patients in NHS hospitals and, of course, these standards should also apply to privately-funded patients. It is also logical that the care provided in independent sector hospitals, particularly when NHS-funded, should be subject to the same degree of audit and quality assurance as NHS hospital care. Engagement by independent sector hospitals with national clinical audits has previously been recommended (Leys 2014).

Most independent sector hospitals are relatively small, and few have High Dependency or Intensive Care facilities (Leys 2014). For this reason, the nature and extent of surgery conducted there and the patients who undergo surgery tends to be of lower risk than in many NHS hospitals (CHP 2017). With a lower-risk surgical population in these hospitals, it can be anticipated that major complications will arise less frequently. When complications do arise during or after surgery, there may be a need to transfer patients to other hospitals for specialist care. Unlike many such complications, perioperative anaesthesia is an unpredictable, and therefore largely unavoidable, complication.

Anaesthetists and surgeons may work as individuals in independent sector hospitals, or they may be formed into groups, partnerships or 'chambers'.

For logistical reasons, independent sector hospitals have not been included in previous National Audit Projects. At the inception of NAMPs, it was decided that there should be an intention to include independent sector hospitals.

Engaging with the independent sector

In 2015, we began attempts to include all independent sector hospitals in NAMPs in the same manner as NHS hospitals. In May 2015, the President of the Royal College of Anaesthetists wrote to all independent hospital chief executives highlighting the recommendations made in the 4th National Audit Project (Cook 2011) and seeking their engagement in NAMPs. This correspondence was followed by further letters to all hospitals in June 2015. In September 2015 a letter was sent describing the process of NAMPs to those hospitals who had registered an interest.
