At the end of this Editorial, we ask you to take a few minutes to respond to our short anonymous online query. If you have no time to read this Editorial about the possible collapse of the peer review system, please just respond to the survey. But we—the editors in chief and managing editor of the International Journal of Public Health (IJPH) and the Public Health Reviews (PHR)—hope you dedicate the time to read this Editorial about the peer review crisis in public health sciences.

In a 2019 workshop of the Swiss School of Public Health (SSPH+)—the owner of the IJPH and PHR—all participants agreed that our journals should continue with thorough pre-publication peer review, including revisions, point-by-point responses and final decisions made by science editors, to strengthen the quality of publications. But soon after, the explosion in COVID-19 research caused an unprecedented increase in submissions and thus demand for peer review in health science journals [1–3]. During the first 6 months of the pandemic, total publications and COVID-19 related publications increased exponentially [2]. Submissions to JAMA almost tripled [4] and to IJPH more than tripled. Elsevier's health and medical journals saw a 63% increase in submissions between February and May 2020, compared to the same period in 2019 [3]. The publication rates of all peer reviewed public-health related articles increased by 25% from 2019 to 2020, and by 21% from 2020 to 2021, exceeding the annual publication growth rates before the pandemic which were 4, 15, 9 and 19% from 2016 until 2019 (Web of Science, category Public, Environmental and Occupational Health).

The growth in publications has brought the peer review system to the edge, as the commitment of scientists did not keep pace with the increase in manuscripts. In Elsevier's health and medical journals the increase in peer review invitation acceptances from 2019 to 2020 (February to May periods) was about 50% lower than the increase in submissions [3]. The records of IJPH provide sobering facts, too. “I do not have time” has become a leading response—and even worse: the majority does not respond at all. In 2021, 53% of (repeated) invitations for peer review remained unanswered, whereas 38% actively declined. Both, in 2021 and 2022, only 9% of all invited reviewers agreed to provide a review. In contrast, during the years prior to the pandemic, we observed a rather stable rate of 35%–40% who would agree and deliver a review report.

The consequences of this crisis are equally bad for our authors and editors. First, the endless search for reviewers has slowed down the publishing process substantially. Second, editors have to resort to the release of automatic “mass-invitations” to 20+ potential reviewers at a time and to remind those repeatedly, thus, flooding the stressed community with even more invitation emails.
