Scottish Banknotes:

Scotland Analysis Great Britain: H.M. Treasury, 2013-04-23 The UK Government is undertaking a major cross government programme of analysis prior to the referendum on Scottish independence in 2014 The aim is to provide a comprehensive and detailed analysis of Scotland's place in the UK This paper examines how Scotland might arrange its currency and wider macroeconomic framework It reviews the current UK arrangements and examines the options for change In the event of a vote for independence Scotland would have to establish its own institutional framework and the current system of risk sharing would end An independent Scottish state would have four main currency options continue to use sterling with a formal agreement with the continuing UK a sterling currency union use sterling unilaterally with no formal agreement sterlingisation join the euro or introduce a new Scottish currency This paper examines all these options and concludes that all of them would be less likely to be economically suitable for both Scotland and the rest of the UK Scottish Miscellany

The Local Currency Area Charles Moore, If we turn to the questions what is money and what not money is and what is barter and what is not barter economists lead us down a path to incoherence and useless definitions Barter is probably the most misunderstood economic function on the planet The outcome is that economists have a broad definition of money and a narrow definition of barter so broad and so narrow respectively that they are useless They also lead to incoherent and inconsistent outcomes Hence the analysis of money proceeds from the principle that all essential phenomena of economic life are capable of being described in terms of goods and services of decisions about them and of relations between them Money spontaneously enters the picture in order to mediate transactions via its existence as a numeraire of exchange value it does not affect the economic process of trade It is man s varying skills and different needs that prompted the exchange of goods and services Thus came the need for a form of valuation that would determine how much or how many one kind of commodity should be exchanged with another good of a different quantity or mass and volume This ancient predicament of setting fair trade values gave birth to crude valuation tools and solutions like counting and weighing Thus the spontaneous emission of a numeraire to mediate barter based instantaneous exchanges of goods and services was observed Its existence is a natural by product of trade it is not the creation of man or law money is born solely from trade and hence without trade money cannot exist All instantaneous barter based exchanges emit monetary exchange value This foundational understanding addresses the centuries of incoherent inconsistencies of economics
