The Castle by the Sea Henry Brereton Marriott Watson, 1909 The Sea of Sensitivity Don C. Nix, 2011-10-27 Wonder is the invisible component of transformation It is a special kind of consciousness an expanded state that involves both the mind and the heart It focuses the mind on generative Being and produces a subtle thrill throughout the mind and body as perceptions of and connection to the Cosmos emerge in experience Wonder opens the mind to Being and the body to experiences of depth and sacredness If the state persists for any length of time it will create experiences of mystery and infinity It opens the eyes It opens the heart It generates gratitude as we contemplate the grace cascading upon us and perceive ourselves in a context of Vastness It causes us for a moment to step outside of our separateness and open ourselves to the Cosmos Wonder is vastly under rated It is not usually considered in the list of human experiences that we consider to be important states in life such as love compassion and joy It deserves more of our attention however because wonder is a unique door opening a portal to connection with the invisible living generative Field of Being that surrounds us and sustains our life on this Earth Wonder is in the moment a heightened sensitivity to the miraculous that enfolds us every moment that we are alive It lifts us out of our torpor If we can wake ourselves from our sleep we will find ourselves living in a perpetual state of wonder Talking Book Topics ,1978
