Smart Business and Digital Transformation Sándor Gyula Nagy,Tamás Stukovszky,2023-06-15 Beginning in the mid 2010s the Fourth Industrial Revolution has seen remarkable changes in information technology that have blurred the boundaries between the physical digital and biological worlds Industry 4 0 has enabled so called smart factories in which computer systems equipped with machine learning algorithms can learn and control robotics with minimal need for human input While smart technology has enabled many manufacturing businesses to increase efficiency and cut costs many others are still struggling with implementing it This book aims to help students practitioners and industry leaders to become change agents and take their first steps on the path of transformation Smart Business and Digital Transformation addresses the challenge of becoming smart from three different perspectives smart factory smart industry and smart environment Covering technologies including the Internet of Things IoT cloud artificial intelligence AI mobility 5G and big data analytics the book shows how enterprises can take advantage of them and ultimately beat the competition The book considers the importance of operational processes business models and organisational culture The contributing authors and editors based at Corvinus University present a multidimensional picture of Industry 4 0 which is both diverse in its voices and unified in its vision Smart Business and Digital Transformation meets the growing demand for a textbook that not only presents the latest concepts and theories but is also practical for planning managing and implementing digital transformation in practice The chapters include case studies to demonstrate the practical applications and each chapter ends with review and discussion questions to develop students skills and competencies Students of business and digital transformation on advanced undergraduate and MBA courses will find it an indispensable guide to a vibrant and challenging topic The Case for International Sharing of Scientific Data National Research Council,Policy and Global Affairs,Board on Research Data and Information,Board on International Scientific Organizations,Committee on the Case of International Sharing of Scientific Data: A Focus on Developing Countries,2013-01-11 The theme of this international symposium is the promotion of greater sharing of scientific data for the benefit of research and broader development particularly in the developing world This is an extraordinarily important topic Indeed I have devoted much of my own career to matters related to the concept of openness I had the opportunity to promote and help build the open courseware program at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology MIT This program has made the teaching materials for all 2 000 subjects taught at MIT available on the Web for anyone anywhere to use anytime at no cost In countries where basic broadband was not available we shipped it in on hard drives and compact disks Its impact has been worldwide but it has surely had the greatest impact on the developing world I am also a trustee of a nonprofit organization named Ithaca that operates Journal Storage JSTOR and other entities that make scholarly information available at very low cost The culture of science has been international and open for centuries Indeed the scientific enterprise can only work when all information is open and accessible because science works through critical analysis and replication of results In recent years as some scientific data and especially technological data have increased in economic value frequently has caused us to be far less open with information than business and free enterprise require us to be Indeed the worldwide shift to what is known as open innovation is strengthening every day Finally since the end of World War II the realities of modern military conflict and now terrorism have led governments to restrict information through classification This is important but I believe that we classify far too much information The last thing we need today at the beginning of the twenty first century is further arbitrary limitations on the free flow of scientific information whether by policies established by governments and businesses or by lack of information infrastructure For all these reasons the international sharing of scientific data is one of the topics of great interest here at the National Academies and has been the subject of many of our past reports This is the primary reason why this symposium has been co organized by the NRC s Policy and Global Affairs Division the Board on International Scientific Organizations BISO and the Board on Research Data and Information BRDI The Case for International Sharing of Scientific Data A Focus on Developing Countries Proceedings of a Symposium summarizes the symposium
