Course overview

Welcome!

The aim of my course is to offer you a different point of view on one of the most controversial issue related to globalization, the multinational enterprise (MNE).

Are MNEs an instrument of social and economic development for both host and home countries? Are they, conversely, a tool of exploitation of the less developed countries or are they driving work away from the industrialized countries? Similar opposite arguments arise considering topics such the natural resources exploitation, or the convergence of local culture towards foreign models.

The goals

At the end of my course you will be able to evaluate the impact of MNE in the economic history of host economies, retrieving information from scientific readings and historical documents, comparing different points of view and recognizing different patterns of development of the MNE.

In addition, working in a multicultural-international class, you will take advantage sharing with your classmates different national experience and perspective on such controversial topics.

Why history?

MNE is a long-standing phenomena and this course argues that a historical perspective allows us to better understand MNE's behavior, stressing the importance of time-
