Obe,2012-12-06 This year we remember the 39th anniversary of the atomic bomb explosions in Hiroshima and Nagasaki which led to the exposure of thousands of people to high doses of ionizing radiations Nearly 18 years earlier on the 15th of September 1927 H J Muller presented his paper The Problem of Genic Modification at the Fifth International Congress of Genetics in Berlin in which he brilliantly demonstrated the mutagenic activity of X rays In 1928 K H Bauer formulated his mutation theory of the origin of cancer and already in 1914 Th Boveri speculated that tumor cells originate from an abnormal chromosomal complement In the meantime we have learned that also nonionizing radiation and an immense number of environmental chemicals both man made and naturally occurring are mutagenic in a variety of test systems including human cells In no case has it been shown unequivocally that physical or chemical mutagens have led to an elevation of the mutation rate in the germ cells of man but in view of the huge body of experimental data this seems to be a problem of detection It can be expected that germ cell mutations are induced as a consequence of exposure to mutagens in man as yet undetectable with the methods at hand An uncontrolled addition of mutations to the human gene pool may well have unforeseen and catastrophic consequences in future generations for whom we should feel responsible
