Autobiography Thurlow Weed,1884 Special Bibliography ,1982 Mother Nicholas Royle,2020-05-14 A tender and graceful study of parents and children and a finely judged and measured attempt to capture the flitting quicksilver shapes of what we keep and what we lose the touch the tone the gaze of the past as it fades It is a moving and beautifully achieved memoir and a testament to the writer s skill and generosity of spirit Hilary Mantel Before the devastating loss of her marbles Mrs Royle a nurse by profession is a marvellously no nonsense character an autodidact who reads widely and voraciously swears at her fox hunting neighbours and instils in the young Nick a love of literature and of wildlife that will form his character and his career In this touching funny and beautifully written portrait of family life mother son relationships and bereavement Nicholas Royle captures the spirit of post war parenting as well as of his mother whose dementia and death were triggered by the tragedy of losing her other son Royle s younger brother to cancer in his twenties At once poetic and philosophical this extraordinary memoir is also a powerful reflection on climate crisis and mother nature on literature and life writing on human and non human animals and on the links between the maternal and memory itself Life of Thurlow
