

Module 5: Psychopathology of Adult Personality and Behavior: Hours:12

For most of us, our adult personality is attuned to the demands of society. In other words, we readily comply with most societal expectations. In contrast, there are certain people who, although they do not necessarily display obvious symptoms of an Axis I disorder, nevertheless have certain traits that are so inflexible and maladaptive that they are unable to perform adequately at least some of the varied roles expected of them by their society, in which case we may say that they have a personality disorder (formerly known as a character disorder).

- Two of the general features that characterize most personality disorders are
  1. chronic interpersonal difficulties
  2. problems with one's identity or sense of self (Livesley, 2001).
- According to general DSM-IV-TR criteria for diagnosing a personality disorder, the person's enduring pattern of behavior must be pervasive and inflexible, as well as stable and of long duration.
- It must also cause either clinically significant distress or impairment in functioning and be manifested in at least two of the following areas: cognition, affectivity, interpersonal functioning, or impulse control.
- From a clinical standpoint, people with personality disorders often cause at least as much difficulty in the lives of others as in their own lives.
- The category of personality disorders is broad, encompassing behavioral problems that differ greatly in form and severity

TYPES

- Cluster A: Includes paranoid, schizoid, and schizotypal personality disorders. People with these disorders often seem odd or eccentric, with unusual behavior ranging from distrust and suspiciousness to social detachment.
- Cluster B: Includes histrionic, narcissistic, antisocial, and borderline personality disorders. Individuals with these disorders share a tendency to be dramatic, emotional, and erratic.
- Cluster C: Includes avoidant, dependent, and obsessivecompulsive personality disorders. In contrast to the other two clusters, people with these disorders often show anxiety and fearfulness. Two additional personality disorders—depressive and passive-aggressive personality disorders—are listed in DSM-IV-TR in an appendix.

Prevalence of the personality disorders estimates for one or more personality disorders have ranged from 4.4 percent to 14.8 percent (Grant et al., 2005; Lenzenweger, 2008; Paris, 2010).
