

[Question]: When faced with a difficult problem or setback, what is your approach?
 When I face a difficult problem, my first reaction is usually to get a bit overwhelmed. I quickly try to take a step back to understand what the problem is, what has caused the problem and then try to figure out a way to solve the problem. Once I have noted down my ideas and solution, I will move forward to execute. As an example, as a gymnast I compete with a routine that I need to present to an audience. If I end up making mistakes in the routine, I first feel sad. After having given it a bit of time, I reflect on what went wrong in the routine and how my preparation led me to this routine. Then I plan how to do things differently for the next time.
