Abstract: This article aims to present the specifics and characteristics of personality development during adolescence in light of the family’s influence on the adolescent’s self-esteem, self-perception, and behavior. Self-concept holds a particular importance in an individual’s psychological and social development and expression. Self-concept contributes to an individual’s communication, personal confidence, and independence. The objectives of the article are as follows: to trace some basic aspects of the influence of family on personality and its formation; to present concrete empirical dimensions of the Self-concept of students in a Bulgarian environment as well as their relationships with their parents; to show whether there are differences among the main ethnic groups in terms of their Self-concept and parental influence. The empirical analysis of the article is based on research conducted with secondary school students in 2018 within the framework of the “Modern Bulgarian Education: Status and Deficits” project, of which there were 130 Bulgarian, 70 Turk, and 70 Roma students aged 14–16 and of both sexes. The students were randomly selected from several Bulgarian secondary schools. To establish Self-images and the formation of various qualities, we used a method highlighting the types of personality tests used to register Self-concept profiles, including various personal qualities in different areas of personality expression. Students rate the qualities as real and as their desire to possess them on a five-degree scale from “1”—I do not possess at all to “5”—I completely possess the corresponding quality. The survey results showed that young people to a large extent tend to strive for the construction of their Self-image as open to sociability, contacts, and communication to attain affirmation among peers and autonomy. The article also analyzes assessments of parents’ involvement in children’s lives as well as the importance of family as a value. The main conclusion of the article is that upbringing in the family is key to the development of a child’s Self-concept and success, the value structure and emotional state, as well as overall personal activity.

1. Introduction

The topic of personal development and Self-concept is frequently discussed in the scientific literature. It is of particular relevance to society as childhood and adolescence are the periods in which personalities are formed. In the processes of personality development, family plays one of the main roles. A key characteristic of the family as a social community is that it implies close relationships, emotional and immediate connections, and providing support and assistance between members. The family is a complex and dynamic organism that underpins the social system and influences both its members and institutional relationships in local, regional, and national contexts. Families are characterized by some level of income that describes their economic status. On the other hand, they are distinguished by their ethnic and cultural specificity, including the systems of values and cultural models that follow. Families are also characterized by a certain pattern of relationships and contacts

Personality Development In Adolescence:

Personality Development In Adolescence Eva Skoe, Anna von der Lippe, 2005-07-22 The formation of identity in adolescence is the most central concept in psychological and sociological studies of young people. Most theories to date assume that adolescents share the same conditions under which their identities are formed. Personality Development in Adolescence is a collection of work by leading researchers that considers different contexts affecting personality and identity development. Three main contexts are considered: cultural, family, and life span development. Of central importance to developmental psychologists, this collection will also be valuable to social workers, teachers, nurses, and all those whose work involves young people.

Personality Development in Adolescence Anna Louise von der Lippe, 1998 Challenge and conflict seem to be an integral part of adolescent life. Morality, gender, family contexts, and social change are examined in a cross-cultural study of personality development in adolescence. Norwegian findings challenge some American findings, but overall there are more transcultural similarities than differences for the internalization of personality structure. Personality Development in Adolescence will be of interest to clinical psychologists, sociologists, and criminologists in examining ego identity and adolescent development.

Molfese, Dennis L. Molfese, Robert R. McCrae, 2000-06-01 This is the third book in a series of Across the Life Span volumes that has come from the Biennial Life Span Development Conferences. The authors, well known in their fields, present theoretical and research issues important for the understanding of temperament in infancy and childhood as well as personality in adolescence and adulthood. Current findings are placed within theoretical and historical contexts, making each chapter distinctive. The chapter authors focus on their work and its implications for temperament and personality issues across the life span. In addition, they include summaries of research by other investigators and theorists, placing their work and that of others in a lifespan perspective.

Updated and revised to reflect the new developments in the field, the Handbook of Child Psychology, Sixth Edition, contains new chapters on such topics as spirituality, social understanding, and non-verbal communication. Volume 3, Social, Emotional, and Personality Development, edited by Nancy Eisenberg, Arizona State University, covers mechanisms of socialization and personality development, including parent-child relationships, peer relationships, emotional development, gender role acquisition, pro-social and anti-social development, motivation, achievement, social cognition, and moral reasoning, plus a new chapter on adolescent development.

McLean, Monisha Pasupathi, 2009-11-11 Monisha Pasupathi and Kate C McLean Where Have You Been Where Are You Going Narrative Identity in Adolescence How can we help youth move from childhood to adulthood in the most effective and positive way possible This is a question that parents educators researchers and policy makers engage with every day In this book we explore the potential power of the stories that youth construct as one route for such movement Our emphasis is on how those stories serve to build a sense of identity for youth and how the kinds of stories youth tell are informed by their broader contexts from parents and friends to nationalities and history Identity development and in particular narrative identity development concerns the ways in which adolescents must integrate their past and present and articulate and anticipate their futures Erikson 1968 Viewed in this way identity development is not only unique to adolescence and emergent adulthood but also intimately linked to childhood and to adulthood The title for this chapter borrowed from the Joyce Carol Oates story highlights the precarious position of adolescence in relation to the construction of identity In this story the protagonist poised between childhood and adulthood navigates a series of encounters with relatively little awareness of either her childhood
