of improving charity through rational means and incorporating scientific action. Consequently, workers in charity organizations required basic knowledge in psychology and socio-economic development (Zaviršek & Rajgelj, 2019). The psychological knowledge was to help in lowering the depression suffered by the working class. In contrast, socio-economic knowledge would help in policy formulation to protect the workers using a scientific viewpoint. As a result of the scientific requirement for successful social development, an academic profession to study the field emerged.

Social Work as a Profession

Most social workers in the late 19th century belonged to the bourgeoisie and wanted to obtain class equality. They came together to lobby for an academic discipline that teaches people to fight for community rights from a professional point of view. Columbia University was the first ever school to offer a degree in social work in 1898 (Crisp, 2019). The class struggle made many people wish to join colleges to be professionals in social work as a prerequisite for instituting societal change. Since the introduction of social work academic qualification, different sectors of the economy require people educated in social work to help make society a better place.

The educated social workers became powerful in Europe as they not only challenged the crony capitalists but also challenged the government to improve the well-being of people. As globalization started, the social work movements lobbied for equality when treating immigrants, worked towards eliminating poverty, and aided all the people in need. Social work started in Europe as poverty relief spread worldwide as the workers became passionate about people's suffering worldwide. Social work is among the most revered academic qualifications required in various employment platforms. Most governmental appointments require people qualified in social work to help in the public service (Lavié & Fernandez, 2018).

In the hospital setting, social workers are paramount in the health promotion and reduction of lifestyle diseases. Social work today has evolved to be the world's defender of human rights and a key agent in the development of humanity. One of the most influential social workers in the contemporary world is Joe Kort, who specializes in helping families in the USA through couple counseling (Zaviršek & Rajgelj, 2019). An increase in the number of social workers increases society's quality of life.

Prospective Future of Social Work

The world is experiencing an exponential rise in population, poverty, and climate change problems. Consequently, the number of societal problems is expected to increase. The future of the social work profession is promising, and more social work
