Abstract

Purpose: The purpose of the study was to explore Hispanic adults' experiences participating in the Building a Healthy Temple diabetes self-management education and support (DSMES) cluster randomized trial and collect their insights on intervention approach, delivery, content, impact, and suggested improvements for future DSMES programs delivered at church.

Methods: Focus groups were conducted with participants from both intervention arms, that is, faith-based (FB) group and faith-placed group. Participating churches were predominantly Hispanic and located in San Antonio, Texas. Focus groups were audiotaped and transcribed verbatim. Inductive content analysis was performed with the assistance of NVivo software to code and categorize emerging themes.

Results: A total of 138 adult participants took part in the current study. Participants in both groups highly valued the church setting for its convenient location and support system and reported positive changes in diabetes-related beliefs, knowledge, skills, behaviors, and health outcomes. FB participants appreciated the incorporation of spiritual teachings and facilitation by lay leaders, which created a sense of empowerment and improved outlook on living with diabetes.

Conclusions: Church holds promise as a setting for DSMES program delivery in Hispanic communities. Church-based DSMES programs using a FB approach may further facilitate program adoption and sustainability.

Type 2 diabetes (T2DM) disproportionately affects Hispanics, the largest minority population in the United States.<sup>1</sup> Ongoing diabetes self-management education and support (DSMES) is crucial for individuals with T2DM to develop and sustain health behaviors needed to effectively reduce risk of severe diabetes-related complications.<sup>2–4</sup> Traditionally, DSMES is offered in outpatient clinical settings.<sup>5</sup> However, Hispanics may have limited access to DSMES services due to a lack of health insurance coverage and a regular source of primary care.<sup>6</sup> Moreover, financial and linguistic obstacles may further impede Hispanic patients' access to clinic-based DSMES services.<sup>6</sup> Innovative delivery of DSMES programs and services in community settings is needed to address these challenges in reaching underserved Hispanics.

Churches have emerged as a viable setting to reach vulnerable communities, including underserved Hispanic populations.<sup>7</sup> Several DSMES interventions conducted in church settings have shown success in improving various diabetes-related outcomes, including improvements in participants' ability to read food labels, increased healthy eating behaviors, and increased physical activity.<sup>8–20</sup> Given that the majority of Hispanics report a Christian religious affiliation,<sup>8</sup> churches may be a culturally appropriate, cost-effective setting for DSMES program delivery.<sup>9</sup> Health programs offered in a church setting are classified as either faith-placed (FP) or faith-based (FB).
