Editorial on the Research Topic

Emotional intelligence: Current research and future perspectives on mental health and individual differences

The last two decades have seen a steadily growing interest in emotional intelligence (EI) research and its applications. As a side effect of this boom in research activity, a flood of conceptualizations and measures of EI have been introduced. Consequently, the label “EI” has been used for a wide array of (often conflicting) models and measures, which has impeded consistent summaries of empirical evidence. This confusion among models/measures is problematic because different measurement approaches produce different results, which makes it difficult to theorize what EI really is or what it predicts since there is limited consistency in the empirical data. On one side there are proponents of the ability model (see Mayer et al., 2005) which recognizes that EI includes four distinct types of ability and defines EI as the ability to perceive and integrate emotion to facilitate thoughts, understand and regulate emotions to promote personal growth (Mayer and Salovey, 1997). This kind of EI would only be measurable through maximum performance tests. On the opposite side, we find supporters of the trait model. In particular, Petrides et al. (2007) defines trait EI as a constellation of emotional perceptions assessed through questionnaires and rating scales. The theory of trait EI is summarized with applications from the domains of clinical, educational, and organizational psychology (Petrides et al., 2016) and it's clearly distinguished from the notion of EI as a cognitive ability. Of course, there is no scarcity of other models and perspectives of EI, including mixed approaches, often used in professional setting to train and evaluate management potential and skills, that consider EI as a broad concept that includes (among others) motivations, interpersonal and intrapersonal abilities, empathy, personality factors and wellbeing (see Mayer et al., 2008).

The Materiality and Spatiality of Death, Burial and Commemoration Christoph Klaus Streb, Thomas Kolnberger, 2021-09-28 Death dying and burial produce artefacts and occur in spatial contexts The interplay between such materiality and the bereaved who commemorate the dead yields interpretations and creates meanings that can change over time Materiality is more than simple matter void of meaning or relevance The apparent inanimate has meaning It is charged with significance has symbolic and interpretative value perhaps a form of selfhood which originates from the interaction with the animate In our case gravestones bodily remains and the spatial order of the cemetery are explored for their material agency and relational constellations with human perceptions and actions Consciously and unconsciously by interacting with such materiality one is creating meaning while materiality retroactively provides a form of agency Spatiality provides more than a mere context it permits and shapes such interaction Thus artefacts mementos and memorials are exteriorised materialised and spatialized forms of human activity they can be understood as cultural forms the function of which is to sustain social life However they are also the medium through which values ideas and criteria of social distinction are reproduced legitimised or transformed This book will explore this interplay by going beyond the consideration of simple grave artefacts on the one hand and graveyards as a space on the other hand to examine the specific interrelationships between materiality spatiality the living and the dead The chapters in this book were originally published as a special issue of the journal Mortality

Problematizing Service-Learning Trae Stewart, Nicole Webster, 2010-12-01 Interest in and research on civic engagement and service learning have increased exponentially In this rapid growth efforts have been made to institutionalize pedagogies of engagement across both K 12 and higher education As a result increased positive attention has been complemented equally by well founded critiques complicating experiential approaches claims and questioning if institutional financial and philosophical commitment is warranted A key complaint from these critical voices is the tightly woven protective insular core in the field of service learning This claim is not unfounded nor necessarily bad Initial efforts to legitimize service learning and other forms of community based education required group cohesion The concern however is that the initial group cohesion has led to groupthink wherein group members have avoided critical analysis and evaluation This book aims to prevent groupthink within the field of service learning by allowing for the examination of effective alternatives by new voices who can serve as critical evaluators from within the field itself. Myriad perspectives are offered including empirical, theoretical, practical, and community perspectives. Authors challenge preconceived notions of service learning who is benefited by this pedagogy, outcomes of participation and implementation, and most importantly, the theoretical, conceptual, and methodological lenses through which service learning is even considered. The book allows service learning's major criticisms to be examined, challenges to be voiced, and research agendas to be laid. This book parallels service learning's presence and popularity across various disciplines/fields. Chapters are written from broad perspectives and are aimed to inform service learning researchers and educators, community organizations, and policy makers who consider service learning as a means to address civic responsibility. Authors expose theoretical and philosophical concerns circulating in the field and often still occupying spaces on the fringe of discourse, action, and research. The book raises fundamental questions for undergraduate and graduate courses with social justice themes by considering the implications that pedagogies of engagement have on learners and communities.

Total Laryngectomy Lisa M. Evangelista, 2025-02-24 Total Laryngectomy: Assessment and Management of Respiration, Swallowing, and Alaryngeal Voice is a valuable guide for clinical training that provides transformative insights and practices to improve patient care, advance the field of total laryngectomy, and support speech language pathologists in their critical role as practitioners. Clinicians utilize advanced techniques to evaluate and manage airway, swallowing, and voice dysfunction among individuals who have undergone total laryngectomy. These modern approaches not only enhance the clinical assessment and treatment possibilities but also consider patients' comprehensive needs, including their vocational, social, and psychological aspects. This holistic perspective acknowledges that the impacts of laryngectomy extend beyond physiological issues, emphasizing the importance of addressing the complete well-being of patients. Written by leading experts in head and neck surgery, laryngology, and speech pathology, this text fills a significant gap in the literature by offering an all-inclusive approach to total laryngectomy rehabilitation. It converts informal knowledge into a structured, evidence-based format promoting best practices and improved patient outcomes. Through visual aids such as photos of videofluoroscopy, manometry, surgical techniques, and clinical practices, the text ensures that speech language pathologists are well-equipped to support their patients in navigating the complexities of life after total laryngectomy.

Key Features: Comprehensive coverage of all aspects of total laryngectomy rehabilitation, including respiration, swallowing, and voice restoration. High-quality visuals of advanced instrumentation aiding in the assessment and treatment of laryngectomy-related issues. Authored by leading experts in head and neck surgery, laryngology, and speech pathology. Designed as both an essential reference for troubleshooting complex clinical cases and a supplementary resource for graduate medical and nursing education. Videos showcasing videofluoroscopy, esophageal balloon dilation, and techniques for tracheoesophageal puncture tract troubleshooting.

Education, Space and Urban Planning Angela Million, Anna Juliane Heinrich, Thomas Coelen, 2016-07-26 This book examines a range of practical developments that are happening in education as conducted in urban settings across different scales It contains insights that draw upon the fields of urban planning urbanism geography architecture education and pedagogy It brings together current thinking and practical experience from German and international perspectives This discussion is organised in four segments schools and the neighbourhood education and the neighbourhood education and the city and finally education and the region Contributors cover a wide range of contemporary and significant socio political aspects of education over the last decade They reinforce emergent thinking that space and its urban context are important dimensions of education This book also underscores the need for more research in the relationships between education and urban development itself Current urban planning does not fully connect our understanding in education with what we know in the spatial and planning sciences Accordingly this release is an early attempt to bring together a growing body of integrated and interdisciplinary reflection on education theory and practice
